Apparently Khatchaturian was once seduced by the harmonic audacities of modernism but has since reverted to a distinctly melodic style, strongly influenced by Armenian and Caucasian folktunes. For a final estimate of his music, and these are still hard to come by in English, we may turn to an article, "Music in Russia," by Mr. Slonimsky, which appears in the 1941 edition of "Who Is Who in Music:" "Another Caucasian composer, Khatchaturian, has now mounted into the first rank of Soviet composers. There is romance and melancholy in his music. He cares little for harmonic and contrapuntal elaboration, but he has simple power of invention, and that is what counts in his case."

* * * *

As the Pops go into their final week Mr. Slonimsky, himself, will be represented as composer. On Tuesday evening, Children's Night, Arthur Fiedler will conduct the first performance of "My Toy Balloon," Variations on a Brazilian Kindergarten Tune. This is plainly a fruit of Mr. Slonimsky's recent six months' sojourn in South America, where he gathered material for a forthcoming book.

FINAL POPS

TOMORROW EVENING

French Military March.....Saint-Saens
Unfinished Symphony, First Movement.
Schubert
Dance of the Swans from the Ballet, "Swan Lake".....Tchaikovsky
Procession of the Sardar from the Caucasian Sketches.....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Largo from "Xerxes".....Handel
Piano Concerto.....Khatchatourian
Soloist—Bernhard Weiser
"Estudiantina," Waltzes.....Waldteufel
Moto perpetuo.....Strauss
"Wintergreen for President".....Gershwin

TUESDAY—CHILDREN'S NIGHT

"Up the Street," March.....Morse
Overture to "Light Cavalry".....Suppe
Polka from "The Golden Age".Shostakovitch
Finale from the Seventh Symphony.
Beethoven
"My Toy Balloon," Variations on a Brazilian Kindergarten Tune.Slonimsky
'The Animals' Carnival.....Saint-Saens
Pianos—Leo Litwin, Harold Rubens
'Columbia,' Fantasy Polka.....Rollinson
Trombone Solo—C. J. Coffey
'Yankee Doodle Went to Town".....Gould Salute to our Fighting Forces..Arr. by Bodge

WEDNESDAY

Garden Club Night

"Oxford Street," March.....Coates
"Aida," Fantasia.....Verdi
"To a Water Lily".....MacDowell
"Nutcracker," Ballet Suite.....Tchaikovsky
Dance of the Penny Whistles Waltz of the Flowers
"Espana," Rhapsody.....Chabrier
Variations on a Nursery Song, for Orchestra and Piano Obligato.....Dohnanyi Soloist: Harold Rubens
"Southern Roses," Waltzes.....Strauss
Jazz Pizzicato.....Anderson
Spanish Dance from "La Vida Breve".....deFalla

THURSDAY

Harvard Summer School Night
Malcolm Holmes, '28, conducting
Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"
Rimsky-Korsakov
Prelude and Fugue from the Concerto Grosse for Strings and Piano.....Bloch
Piano: Leo Litwin
Sixth Symphony (2d and 3d movements)
Tchaikovsky
G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, conducting Harvard Summer School Chorus
"The Heavens Are Telling" from "The Creation".....Haydn Masonic Music.....Mozart
"Mirth, With Thee I Mean to Live," from "L'Allegro".....Handel
Symphony No. 104 in D major (two movements).....Haydn
Academic Festival Overture.....Brahms
Malcolm Holmes conducting Suite from "The Incredible Flutist"
Walter Piston, '24
"Emperor" Waltzes.....Strauss
"Knightsbridge," March.....Coates

FRIDAY—Closing Night

(Sponsored by the Army and Navy Club of Boston)

"Navy Wings," March.....Weeks-Fazioli
Overture to "Mignon".....Thomas Irish Air from County Derry
Arranged by Percy Grainger
"The Ride of the Valkyries".....Wagner
"Peer Gynt" Suite.....Grieg
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn.....Valerius
Rhapsody in Blue.....Gershwin
Piano Solo: Leo Litwin
"Over There," A Selection of American War Songs.....Arranged by M. L. Lake
"Arkansas Traveler".....Guion
Salute to Our Fighting Forces

FEATURE BACH MUSIC AT POPS

S. Seiniger and E. Power Biggs Applauded

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

To last evening's Pop Concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave both a soloist, E. Power Biggs, who was heard in Guilmant's First Symphony for Organ and Orchestra, and an orchestral transcriber, Samuel Seiniger, of the violins, whose arrangement of Bach's Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor came to its first performance under Arthur Fiedler's energetic direction.

Bach's great Toccata and Fugue is associated in the minds of many with Leopold Stokowski, whose brilliant arrangement of the piece progressed from the concert hall to the records and finally ended up in Walt Disney's "Fantasia," where it is heard to the accompaniment of Mr. Disney's visual abstractions. Now no one but Mr. Stokowski himself or the Philadelphia Orchestra, can use this version. There is another by Sir Henry Wood, which apparently has not been heard in Boston. Granting the propriety of transcribing Bach's organ works and this commentator is all for it, Mr. Seiniger has done us a service.

Although he could hardly have copied the Stokowski arrangement, since the score is not on exhibition, Mr. Seiniger has undoubtedly been somewhat influenced by it. Intrinsically the piece is one of the boldest that Bach ever wrote and a transcriber should approach it in similar spirit. Here is no place for orchestral pussyfooting. Mr. Seiniger has been plenty bold.

But with all its boldness the transcription, praise be, is never thick, cumbersome or inflated. There is plenty of sonority, but there is also sharpness of outline. From his seat in the orchestra Mr. Seiniger came repeatedly to the front of the platform to acknowledge the applause.

After Bach in these terms Guilmant's Symphony, described on last evening's programme as a Concerto, sounded pretty tame and in places decidedly smug. The first two movements are the best and Mr. Biggs, who played with his usual competence, made much of his extended solo opportunity in the Pastorale. He, too, was recalled repeatedly.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Pops

Tuesday at the Pops in Symphony Hall, these past few weeks, have had especial interest. Last night Arthur Fiedler put in the middle of the program two scores involving that stranger to the conventional concert: The organ. The first of these was an orchestral transcription, by Samuel Seiniger of the orchestra, of Bach's D minor Organ Toccata and Fugue; the second, Guilmant's Organ Concerto No. 1, in D minor with E. Power Biggs as soloist.

There has been a lot of orchestrated Bach, and the D minor Toccata and Fugue has been a popular target in the sport. Some have transcribed with an object of making the orchestra imitate the organ; others have gone all out for color, thick, vivid and much of it, others have gone to the other extreme and put Bach into pallid orchestration, while a fourth group have merely attempted to set in terms of orchestral resources and idiom a work originally conceived for the wind keyboard and pedal instrument.

Mr. Seiniger's version belongs to the last class, generally speaking. His orchestration is prevailingly discreet and it sounds well, if with heavy emphasis in the bass, for which he uses the organ. His choice of assorted percussion — kettledrums, cymbal, brief touches of xylophone and bell—is open to debate as a matter of personal taste. These instruments are available to the modern orchestra, so why not use them? A good argument, which cannot be thrust aside. But at least to this reviewer. Mr. Seiniger's otherwise fine transcription would have been better without them.

Alexandre Guilmant, one of the great among 19th Century organ virtuosos, is not favored as a concert program composer except for organ recitals. His spectacular Concerto, which Mr. Biggs played with great poise and skill, is inherently slight but effective. Its material, apart from the lyrical second movement in which a fragment of a tune from Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony comes frequently to mind, never ventures much beyond the highly moral nature of its tonic-and-dominant introduction. But there are displayful bass passages for the soloist's feet, some toccata-like work for his 10 fingers, and pleasing tunes, together with a middle-class peroration, in the finale, emphasizing trumpets and trombones.—C. W. D.

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN. HERALD
JUL 7 - 1942

Musicians Threaten Auditorium Blacklist

Springfield, Mass., July 7 (UP)—The Springfield municipal auditorium was threatened with "blacklisting" today if the Boston Symphony orchestra is allowed to play in the hall during a series of community concerts.

Edwin H. Lyman, secretary of the Springfield local of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.), said other opera companies and symphony orchestras would be forbidden to appear if the Boston orchestra, a non-union organization, is allowed to play.

In August 1940, James C. Petrillo, national president of the union, barred the Boston orchestra from making phonograph records or broadcasting over the radio.

The Springfield Junior League said it had tentatively booked the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra to appear in place of the Boston symphony if an agreement cannot be reached.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN. CHRONICLE
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I. TIMES
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN. POST
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN. DEMOCRAT
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS. GAZETTE
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS. BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. TELEGRAPH
JUL 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES
JUL 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS. MORNING UNION
JUL 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 8 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA. JOURNAL
JUL 8 - 1942

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(AP)—Carl Behr, 85, a charter member of the Boston, Mass., Symphony Orchestra and organizer of the first children's orchestra in North Carolina, died Tuesday night at the Lowman (Lutheran) Home near here, where he had resided since 1939.

This Clipping From SYRACUSE, N. Y. POST-STANDARD
JUL 9 - 1942

Record Libraries Sought for Soldiers

Syracusans will have an opportunity to share in a nationwide movement in the interest of supplying our armed forces with the finest in music thru new phonograph records of the world's great music. Instead of old castoff records, it is felt that the men should be supplied with the finest recorded music available, hence the formation of a committee consisting of Walter Damrosch, Deems Taylor, Albert Stoessel, Howard Hanson, Sergei Koussevitsky and others.

Each city is aiming to furnish one $100 library of fine records, in cabinet form, and Syracuse headquarters is at the Clark Music company, 416 S. Salina st. Dorothy Clark is local representative.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND. STAR
JUL

Toscanini Introduces Symphony

New York, July 11.—(U.P.) THE FIRST American performance of Dmitri Shostakovich's "war symphony" — the seventh — will be given by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini on Sunday, July 19, it is announced by the National Broadcasting Company.

The program will be broadcast from 4:15 to 6 p.m. (Eastern war time) over a national hookup. It will be carried by short wave to the rest of the world.

The first public concert performance, as previously announced, will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts during August and will be followed by one led by Toscanini with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall in October.

The symphony, written by the young Soviet composer under fire during the German siege of Leningrad last year, runs about an hour and a half and calls for an enlarged orchestra. It was first performed in Kuibishev last March, but has not been heard outside Russia. The score, reproduced on microfilm, was brought here by airplane and is being enlarged for distribution to the instrumentalists of the orchestra.

This Clipping From TIFFIN, OHIO ADVERTISER-TRIBUNE
JUL 11 1942

This Clipping From AUSTIN, TEXAS STATESMAN
JUL 2 1942

This Clipping From MONTGOMERY, ALA. ADVERTISER
JUL 12 1942

This Clipping From NEWARK, N. J. CALL
JUL 19 1942

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEXAS POST
JUL 19 1942

This Clipping From LEWISTON, IDAHO TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1942

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD. MORNING SUN
JUL 19 1942

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO BLADE
JUL 22 1942

This Clipping From DAYTON, OHIO JOURNAL
JUL 20 1942

This Clipping From INDIANAPOLIS, IND STAR
JUL 19 1942

This Clipping From
HYANNIS, MASS. CAPE COD STANDARD TIMES
JUL 13 1942

War Not to Curtail Concerts on Esplanade

BOSTON, July 13 (UP)—Despite the coastal dimout and the war, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under director Arthur Fiedler will open their 14th season of free Esplanade concerts July 20, it was announced today.

Thirty concerts will be included in the Summer program this year instead of the customary 24. Four concerts will be given Wednesday mornings for children at the Hatch Memorial Shell.

Pops Concert

The Boston Pops orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, presented the 65th concert of its 57th season last night at Symphony hall. Bernhard Weiser, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

French Military March.....Saint Saens
Unfinished Symphony, First Movement, Allegro Moderato.....Schubert
Dance of the Swans, from the ballet "Swan Lake".....Tchaikovsky
Procession of the Sardar from the Caucasian Sketches.....Ippolitov-Ivanov
The Star Spangled Banner
Largo from "Xerxes".....Handel
Piano Concerto.....Khatchatourian
Soloist: Bernhard Weiser
Estudiantina Waltzes.....Waldeufel
Moto Perpetuo.....Strauss
Wintergreen For President, from "Of Thee I Sing".....Gershwin
OETAOIN SHRDLU ETAOIN SHRDLUE

The elements which go to make up the exciting Piano Concerto of the brilliant young Soviet composer, Khatchatourian, are many and varied enough to insure a maximum amount of audience appeal, and certainly last night's Pops audience greeted the first Boston performance of this work with genuine enthusiasm.

All the fireworks of the traditional concerto are there, as well as in the second movement, a haunting lyricism. Both are presented in fresh, modern style. The composer is not obviously trying to differ radically from his predecessors—the series of ascending and descending chords in the first movement, for instance, are reminiscent of Tschaikovsky—but Khatchatourian's treatment and thematic material as a whole are far from hackneyed.

There is, particularly in the strongly rhythmic first movement, great emphasis on technical brilliance, especially on the part of the soloist, and the choice of Mr. Weiser, whose forte is technique, was thus completely justified from the start. His playing throughout was authoritative and towards the middle of the first movement his obvious understanding of his material did much to dispell the idea, which might easily have crept into the listener's mind, that the composer had perhaps lost sight, for the moment, of just where he was going.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

The Pops

A new voice in modern Russian music is beginning to be heard beyond the reaches of the Soviet Union. Aram Khatchaturian, Armenian of ancestry, is the composer of a Symphony which was played on the radio last week, and also the author of a brilliant piano concerto which Arthur Fiedler conducted in the first American performance at Pops last night with Bernhard Weiser as the soloist.

The first Khatchaturian work to be heard in Boston, according to available records, was a Trio for violin, clarinet and piano, presented at the Flute Players Club a year ago last February. He was born in Tiflis in 1903, but did not begin the study of music until he was 19 years old—the same age at which Shostakovitch wrote his erudite First Symphony.

On hearing the Piano Concerto one is tempted to venture the opinion that Khatchaturian is a name to be reckoned with in modern music. He has something of consequence to say, if not with the sophistication of some of the modern Russians, at least with artistic sincerity.

The Concerto is strongly nationalistic in flavor with themes built of close intervals and well knit into the fabric of the three movements. Rhythmically the Concerto is varied with some evidences of ragtime. Harmonically it is learned, with not a few diminished and natural seconds. The two outside movements are technically brilliant and dramatic in scope, while the lyrical middle movement is a poetic waltz and a fine example of a modern slow movement.

Mr. Weiser's playing of the solo parts of the Concerto was outwardly brilliant and vigorous. But it was also a knowing and sympathetic performance. Mr. Fiedler and his band gave Mr. Weiser excellent support. The program opened with Saint-Saens' "French Military March," and included works of Schubert, Tchaikovsky, Ippolitov-Ivanov, Handel, Waldteufel, Strauss and Gershwin. —J. W. R.

The second movement is a truly lovely example of modern lyricism, with strings and piano blending to perfection. Mr. Weiser's treatment of the beautiful legato passages could hardly have been improved upon and made this movement, relatively unspectacular in style when compared with the spirited and crashing first movement and finale, the highlight of the entire Concerto.

So modern was the opening theme of the piano in the Finale that it brought to mind the best of the pre-swing jazz piano masters. Like the first, this movement laid emphasis on rhythm, and at the end swung back to the characteristic phrase of the opening.

The performance of the concerto drew bravos from the audience, both for orchestra and soloist, and the former joined in applauding Mr. Weiser.

Mr. Fiedler's program, as usual, was admirably chosen and supplemented with encores. Especially lovely was the arrangement of Handel's perpetually moving "Largo," with organ and strings.

SOVIET MUSIC AT POPS

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With an appropriateness perhaps quite unpremeditated Arthur Fiedler presented music from the Caucasus at the Pop Concert last evening. There were two pieces on his list which derived their inspiration from the region toward which Hitler's legions are now striving, the "Procession of the Sardar" from Ippolitov-Ivanov's "Caucasian Sketches" and the Piano Concerto of Aram Khatchaturian, which was receiving its first performance in Boston, with Bernhard Weiser as the soloist. Incidentally the savage energies of the latter piece are a long way removed from the conventional and somewhat corny exoticisms of the Suite from which the former was taken.

Khatchaturian and his Concerto were discussed at some length in these columns last Sunday. Suffice it to say now that this Armenian-Russian composer, who claims Tiflis as his birthplace, has just turned 39. His music made its way to England two or three years ago and the Concerto in particular caught the popular fancy. It reached the United States much more recently. The Symphony had its American premiere at a New York Philarmonic-Symphony stadium concert last Friday, and last evening's performance of the Piano Concerto may be described as the first professional one in the United States, since it had been heard heretofore only at concerts of the Juilliard School in New York, when the pianist was Maro Ajemian. On Saturday evening William Kapell will play it at a stadium concert. From all appearances we are soon to become Khatchaturian-conscious.

There is an immediate temptation to compare this Soviet composer with his now very well known compatriot, Shostakovitch. The two are about the same age, but their careers have been widely different. When the one was producing his masterly First Symphony at the age of 19 the other was beginning his serious study of music. In contrast to the fierce primitivism of Khatchaturian Shostakovitch appears as a world-weary sophisticate, the sources of whose inspiration are frequently found outside the borders of his country. Khatchaturian, on the other hand, sticks to his Caucasian and Armenian guns. There are still traces of crudity in his music; in texture it inclines to be thick, but there is no mistaking the genuine creative impulse that lies back of it. With Mr. Weiser, who made his Boston debut last February, playing in brilliant fashion, the fiery Finale, in particular, swept everything before it. An important premiere may be a risky thing on a hot night in July, but that of last evening turned out to be a triple triumph—for Mr. Fiedler, for Mr. Weiser and for the composer.

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

The Boston Pops orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, gave its regular concert in Symphony Hall last night. Robert Brink, violinist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

"The Bride-Elect," March.....Sousa
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia.....Tchaikovsky
Scherzo from the Octet.....Mendelssohn
"Tambourina Chinois".....Kreisler
"Symphonie Espagnole" for Violin and Orchestra, Op 21.....Lalo
Soloist: Robert Brink
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1.....Enesco
"Southern Roses," Waltzes.....Strauss
"Guaracho" from the Latin-American Symphonette.....Gould
Sixth Hungarian Dance.....Brahms

Enlivened to a certain extent by the fiddling of Robert Brink, the Pops were otherwise on the placid side last night. The orchestra has performed a good deal better on other occasions with less interesting or entertaining programs than was the case, and the conductor has certainly conducted with far more brilliance and verve. Yet it would be inaccurate to infer that the concert was dreary; it's simply that we've come to expect so much of the Pops that a slight let-down is almost as noteworthy as a crashing triumph.

Robert Brink, performing the solo part of Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole for violin and orchestra, found a cordial (and, needless to say, a capacity) audience on hand to hear him negotiate its difficulties. The young violinist from the Malkin school, using a rare Guarnarius violin lent to him for the occasion, improved as he went along, but never achieved the degree of artistry and virtuosity he demonstrated in the Bruch concerto at one of the Pops concerts last year.

His best work came in the lyric selections, which he projected with a glowing tone and phrased with good taste. The bravura passages fared rather less well, not always coming through over the orchestral accompaniment, and not being especially clearly articulated when they did. The promise for a very fine future is still there, though, and a little more security in front of the orchestra might well make all the difference. As always, Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra were generous with encores, which the audience devoured, along with the main course, with gusto. One change in the announced program was made when the parts of Elmer Olsson's Rondo in F could not be completed in time.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SHOSTAKOVICH UPHELD

Koussevitzky Chides Critics for Opinions on 7th Symphony

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (AP)—When some music critics belittled the Seventh symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, Soviet composer, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad and performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven" and "program music."

Dr. Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius one must listen not once but many times."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has * * * his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR News
AUG 2 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 3 - 1942

Coast Guard Opens Recruiting Campaign

BOSTON, Aug. 3, (UP)—New England Coast Guard recruiting stations today opened a drive for record enlistments after 60,000 persons packed the Charles River Esplanade to view the services anniversary program.

The crowd—largest ever to gather in the area around the Hatch Memorial Shell—saw 100 men sworn into the service branch and a four-hour demonstration on land and the river by Coast Guards. The spectacle opened Coast Guard Week and celebration of the service's 152d birthday.

A parade, rescue by breeches buoy and boat races were included in the program which ended with a concert by 70 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
AUG 5 - 1942

10,000 Children at Hub Concert Program

BOSTON, Aug. 5 (UP)—A record-breaking crowd of more than 10,000 children, aged mostly from four to 14, jammed the Charles river Esplanade today to voice boisterous approval of the concert program they had chosen for Conductor Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Symphony orchestra to play for them.

Fiedler played the program they selected by ballot last Wednesday and added a surprise—a trombone solo, "Columbia," a fantasy polka—which the children enthusiastically applauded. The attendance at the third in a series of four children's concerts was nearly double the previous record.

This Clipping From
N. ATTLEBORO, MASS.
EVE. CHRONICLE
AUG 5 - 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
AUG

Symphony to Travel From Beethoven Fifth To Texas Opus Tonight

Baritone Soloists and Smetana's 'Moldau' Also on Program for Fourth Concert At Miller Theater

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

THIS is a year in which the greater composers have been heavily raided by the dance bands, and lately symphony orchestras have been having some fun turning the tables. Now they are making Commando stabs of their own at the popular ditties, to see how they will sound in full dress. Accordingly when the Houston Summer Symphony orchestra offers its fourth concert of the season at Miller theater at 8:15 tonight, we will hear on the same program with Mozart, Beethoven and other musical giants a resounding and fire-breathing arrangement of that illustrious hotstep, "Deep in the Heart of Texas," which is whammed out with all the hep in the catalogue.

ROUSSEL

This bouncing and irresistible version of the opus that wore callouses on the hands of the nation is the work of Carlton Beyer, assistant librarian of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and has been the great hit of that organization's summer performances. It is full of lusty and surprising effects, and its Texas premiere has been wisely reserved for the end of tonight's program, since anything seems likely to happen. For the rest we will have a rich list of selections by the world's master composers, who are still holding their own at this writing, and the first soloist of the current "Music for Everybody" season. The guest artist will be Edward Bing, who will put his fine baritone voice to use in two numbers from opera.

✦✦✦

Excerpts From Two Great Operas

CONDUCTOR ERNST HOFFMANN and the orchestra will open the program with Sousa's "King Cotton" march, and thereafter will play the overture to "The Bat," by Johann Strauss; two movements of Beethoven's Symphony No. 5; Smetana's tone poem, "The River Moldau"; Drigo's "Serenade" and Brahms' Hungarian Dance No. 5 before taking on Beyer's giddyap ode to Texas.

Mr. Bing, who will make his appearance just after the intermission period, will be heard in the Figaro aria ("Non piu andrai") from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," and the prologue to Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci."

The soloist is well known to most members of the Summer Symphony audience, having sung with the orchestra last season and scored a ringing success with his pleasing manner, splendid vocal equipment and sure command of the operatic style.

Mr. Bing received his training in Europe and was leading baritone of the state opera in Prague, Czechoslovakia, when the blight of oppression caused him to seek an environment more suitable to the cultivation of art. On coming to this country he settled in Tyler, where for some years he has been a teacher of voice. He has appeared on winter programs of the Houston and Dallas symphony orchestras, and impressed critics and public as a singer of unusual perception and high technical skill.

Of the symphonic selections, the principal items are the two movements of the Beethoven Fifth and "The River Moldau," which offer some of the most wonderful music ever assigned to the Miller theater programs.

To indulge in explanatory comment on the Beethoven Fifth is more presumptuous than ever nowadays, since the few people to whom it was unknown at the start of the war have now acquired a degree of familiarity with its first movement at least, due to the V campaign. The four imperative notes with which it opens, long the most famous in music, have come to symbolize the world fight for freedom, and at this moment nobody can hear these so-called "three dots and a dash" without feeling a new sense of resolution.

✦✦✦

Stuff of Which Victory Is Made

BUT all the great power of the Fifth is not spent in its marvelous first section. If this opening is a fierce challenge to fate, the fourth movement is a pean in celebration of victory. In it there is nothing but triumph, and now as never before we have need of its inspirational message. This will be the first time the finale has been played in the park.

"The Moldau" also is new to the programs, and is a work we have long wanted to offer. The composer, Freidrich Smetana, was a Bohemian who lived close to the soil. He is chiefly known for his opera, "The Bartered Bride." But in "The Moldau" he is more himself, perhaps, than in any other of his various works. It is one of the most graceful, sentimental and instantly winning of all tone poems, and it is music whose spell should be greatly enhanced by such surroundings as we have in the park.

The Moldau is a river that wanders through the land formerly known as Bohemia—now, of course, the conquered and devastated Czechoslovakia. What Smetana set out to do was to tell in music the story of this river, from its birth at a bubbling spring in the mountains to its final merging with the vast and mysterious sea.

He accomplished his intention with brilliance. The piece opens with a rippling figure in the violins and woodwinds that gives a perfect suggestion of the spring. When the river forms and begins flowing, it is characterized by a melody of intense beauty and richness, which gradually takes on breadth. Under it runs a liquid accompaniment which is truly inspired—a vivid impression of the eddies and whirlpools of the stream.

At one point the river passes a peasant festival, whose simple music is heard; at another it flows through a ghostly and desolate swamp. Then, finally, in a turbulent climax, it cascades over the rapids, and reaching its greatest beauty and grandeur, bids a moving farewell to the land as it disappears into the sea. It is the story of a river—or the story of life—in a lovely and unforgettable language.

So all is ready for another evening of beauty. Should rain or stormy conditions force a postponement, the program will be played at 8:15 p. m. Wednesday.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
AUG 5 - 1942

123

Themes and Variations

By HENRY SIMON

Musical Diary

Friday, July 31—Power of the Press Department: Harry Futterman of Armed Forces Master Records called up to say that the little item I ran here a few weeks ago had so far produced nine of the 51 libraries of records sent to various camps. Articles in other papers brought in an extra five. Any reader with $75 dollars to spare can endow a camp or naval station of his own choice with a complete library in his name. AFMR will take care of the details.

* * *

Saturday—At the Stadium the First Piano Quartet made its successful New York concert debut. I sat with a group of the Quartet's good friends—delightful people, but more nervous about the success of the affair than the boys on the stage could have been and still play all their scurrying notes. I suggested that one number they played was not quite so good as another and had my face playfully but literally slapped. Then I went home to write an uterly, utterly impartial review. I'm genuinely fond of my friends, but sometimes I get attacks of lumbago from leaning over backwards.

* * *

Sunday—The argument on the merits of the Shostakovich Seventh goes on merrily. Olin Downes devotes a second Sunday sermon in the Times to defending his original lack of enthusiasm for the work. "In the end," he writes, "the argument does resolve itself down to whether Shostakovich is creatively capable of adequate expression, judged by sheerly musical and aesthetic standards, of what he wanted to say. We believe it to be incontestably clear that he has not done this, despite manifestations of great and exceptional talent." Time magazine quotes all shades of criticism, but suggests that my own report—the most enthusiastic in New York—was dictated by PM "to which nothing Russian is alien." Serge Koussevitsky (to whom nothing Russian is alien either, I suppose) goes me one better. "No one since Beethoven," he said yesterday at Lenox, Mass., "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich had. . . . His language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal." Critics who didn't like the Seventh, says the good gray doctor, "will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once, but many times."

That's a dictum which cuts both ways; so before I unleash any more enthusiasm I shall travel up to Lenox to hear Dr. K. conduct a couple of performances of the Symphony on Aug. 14 and 16. His student orchestra, initial reports say, is quite up to doing a first-rate job on it.

* * *

Monday—Dimitri Shostakovich himself, apparently quite unaware of the tempest his symphony has stirred in U. S. musical hearts, reports on the state of music in beseiged Leningrad. The New Masses prints the whole story in its Aug. 4 issue.

"Our philharmonic orchestras," writes the composer, "are conducting their current concert season with great success. Our soloist musicians, with their deep understanding of the musical works, continue to make us composers happy. Our demanding Soviet audiences avidly continue to crowd our concerts and plays.

"This fact, so remarkable and pleasing to us, is terrifying for the Hitlers and Goebbels. We can proclaim to the world that during these days of bloody battles and ceaseless thunder of guns, music never became silent in besieged Leningrad. Art, which in any other country would have had to step aside at such times and find shelter in the quiet zones far from the fighting lines, became in our country a new type of armament striking the enemy."

One report says that Shostakovich recently tried to enlist in a combat regiment and was ordered to cease and desist on pain of imprisonment.

* * *

Tuesday—During most of the Village Vanguard's floor show, a rather boisterous business, the audience taps with its feet, laughs, talks. Then Richard Dyer-Bennett brings on his Swedish lute and sings items like So We'll Go No More A-Roving and old English ballads with quiet intensity and complete conviction. Absolute stillness descends on the room, like turning off the motor in a boat. Even Jerome Weidman, as aggressively unmusical a man as I know felt the spell.

Richard Dyer-Bennett

124

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
AUG 7 - 1942

Who Is This Man Fiedler?

He Puts Pep, Polish, Patriotism Into the Pops

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

LOWELL—Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct an orchestra of 75 players from the Boston Symphony in a concert to be given in the Memorial Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 16 at 2.30, for the benefit of Russian war relief, is the man who has put pep, polish and patriotism into the Pops.

As conductor of the Pops and of the open air concerts on the Charles river esplanade in Boston, the unanimous verdict would be that more than any other musician in New England, he has helped to bring fine music to the people. Now volunteering for the concert in Lowell, for once, at least, he is giving us a similar opportunity to hear a thrilling program of music by virtuosi musicians for a worthy cause.

Arthur Fiedler

If Arthur Fiedler had gone in for a career on the stage, he might have been a matinee idol. On what the radio announces invariably call the podium, he is a dapper and engaging figure. But, more important, for the interpretation of fine music, he is a colorful and dynamic leader who knows what he wants, and how to get it.

Arthur Fiedler has been conductor of the Pops since May, 1930. About that time also, he conceived the idea of the Esplanade concerts which were established largely through his personal efforts. The Hatch Memorial shell is the headquarters also of the Boston chapter of the N. Y. A., and Mr. Fiedler is chief conductor of the National Youth Orchestra which he organized and which played here in Lowell under Mr. Hoyen's direction. He also is the director of the Cecelia society, a group of trained singers, frequently appearing with the Boston Symphony orchestra in the presentation of great choral works.

The son of Emmanuel Fiedler, who for 25 years was a violinist in the Boston Symphony orchestra and an original member of the famous Kneisel quartet, Arthur Fiedler comes of a long musical line, his grandparents, both having been musicians. Born in Boston in 1894, Arthur Fiedler, after graduation from the Boston Latin school, naturally went abroad for musical study under distinguished masters. He joined the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1915.

The patriotic motive of aid to Russia ought to be enough to help the energetic and representative local committee to carry the forthcoming concert here to success. As for the unusual opportunity to enjoy the music of a great orchestra here, it ought to be a matter of local pride to see to it that full attendance signifies our appreciation.

There will be another meeting of the general committee on Monday evening at 7.45 at the Lowell Commercial college, 226 Central street. All interested to help in the project are invited to attend.

More Patrons and Patronesses For Russian Relief Concert

LOWELL—This evening at 7.45 an important meeting will be held at the Lowell Commercial college for all committee members and those interested in the success of the concert to be given next Sunday afternon, August 16, at the Lowell Memorial auditorium, at 2.30 by the Boston Symphony Pops orchestra. Members of the ticket committee particularly are urged to attend this meting or at least to see that returns are made of any tickets that they feel they may not be able to sell.

For next Sunday's concert Arthur Fiedler, conductor, the 80 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Bernhard Weiser, guest pianist, are volunteering their services for the benefit of medical relief to Russia. Their concert gives music lovers of Merrimack valley an opportunity not only to hear a program of symphonic music but at the same time to aid financially in sending medical supplies to our valiant ally. The cause is a humanitarian one.

Doors of the Memorial auditorium will be opened at 1.30 o'clock on the afternon of the concert. It is expected that every seat in the building will be taken, so great has been the enthusiastic response among greater Lowell, Nashua and Lawrence people. Although the arrangement of tables and chairs with the serving of refreshments was considered, it seemed best to model the concert on those given on summer evenings by the same orchestra on the Esplanade in Boston. Tables will not be used and there will be no refreshments served. There will be an air of informality, however. Members of the orchestra will wear white trousers and blue coats; Mr. Fiedler and Mr. Weiser will wear dark trousers and white coats.

Beginning tomorrow and extending through Saturday there will be a public sale of tickets in a booth on the main floor of A. G. Pollards. If tickets remain after this public sale, they will be available at the box office at the Auditorium on Sunday .

Ticket Committee

Mrs. Marjorie Lake MacAusland, choirman of tickets, announces that the following in addition to those already named are assisting her with the sale of tickets: Miss Doris Atkinson, Archie Barlofsky, Miss Berniece Bigelow, Stanley Bigda, C. Belida, Donald Brown, Miss Irene Cushing, John Derakisian, Miss Siranoush Der Manuelian, Miss Jeanne Dozois, Miss Marion H. Fogg, Miss Stephanie Gawlik, Mrs. Clifford Hartley, Mrs. Katherine Krasiuk, Miss Ida Lemire, James McCormack, Paul Novick and John Sullivan.

Tickets may still be secured from the International Institute of Lowell, dial 9031, at the studio of Julius Woessner, East Merrimack street, dial 2952 and at the Lowell Commercial college, 226 Central street, dial 5000.

Additional Patrons

In addition to those already announced, Mrs. George H. Upton, chairman of patrons and patronesses, gives the following list of subscribers:

Miss Helen Barnes, Mr. Edward W. Brigham, Mr. and Mrs. Everett O. Coburn, Dr. and Mrs. Harry R. Coburn, Mr. and Mrs. Garfield A. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney R. Fleet, Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph A. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. S. Stanley Kent, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel H. Levan, Mr. and Mrs. Carlton J. Lombard, Mr. and Mrs. Leo R. Mongeau, Miss Fannie H. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. John A. McGuire, Mrs. Thomas J. O'Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Protzmann, Lieut Col. and Mrs. John Riddell, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Robertson, Jr., Dr. Emma E. Y. Slaughter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Turcotte, Mrs. Ashley Welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Abbott, Mrs. Mary C. Allard, Mr. and Mrs. Jonas Banks, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Banks, Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand W. Bechard, Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Bourgeois, Dr. and Mrs. Charles L. Brennan, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Cooke, Mrs. Irene D'Arsenief, Miss Kathleen F. Delaney, R. N., Miss Margaret D. Delaney, R. N., Miss Sally P. Delaney, R. N., Mr. and Mrs. William P. Duggan, Leslie A. Field, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Edward Fisher, Miss Sally Foster, Dr. Archibald R. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Groves, Miss Mary E. Greenan, R. N., Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Hanson, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford L. Haynes, Mrs. James Gilbert Hill, Mrs. Cyrus W. Irish, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Johnson, Miss Katharine H. Johnson, Frank B. Kenney, Mrs. James J. Kerwin, Miss Shelagh Kerwin, Miss Evelyn E. Lovejoy, R. N., Major and Mrs. Winfred C. MacBrayne.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Morse, Sr., Mrs. Arthur J. Murkland, Mrs. Martha E. McCabe, R. N., Mr. and Mrs. Bernard C. McGuire, Mr. and Mrs. Hubert L. McLaughlin, Mrs. Thomas Nesmith, Jr., Miss Inez A. Newell, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hutchins Parker, Mrs. Arnold C. Perham, Mr. and Mrs. Willard D. Pratt, Mrs. Frances M. Regnier, R. N., St. Joseph's Nurses Alumnae association, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Schmidt, Mrs. Mary V. Slattery, Mr. and Mrs. Philip H. Southwell, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Spalding, Miss Helen W. Sweeney, R. N., Mrs. Albert W. Thompson, Mrs. Margaret C. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Weisberg, Mrs. Frederick C. Weld, Miss Helen Weld, Dr. and Mrs. Charles O. Wilson, Mrs. John G. Wolcott and Mr. and Mrs. Francis C. Zacharer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 23 1942

Outdoor Series Ends On Boston's Esplanade

Large Attendance Reported for Fourteenth Season

The fourteenth season of outdoor concerts on the Esplanade in Boston, played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's direction, closed last Tuesday. Thirty concerts were scheduled, twenty-six on the evenings between July 20 and Aug. 18, except for Saturdays, and four children's concerts on Wednesday mornings. Three of the evening concerts were canceled on account of rain, and two curtailed on that account. The estimated attendance for the series was 300,000.

The number of players, seventy-seven, was slightly larger than before, and the schedule was longer by six concerts than its predecessor. There is no admission charge. The funds for supporting the concerts come from answers to solicitations by mail, contributions in coin boxes on the grounds, optional contributions for program notes and rentals of chairs at one dime each. Three works for piano and orchestra were scheduled and two played, and Mr. Fiedler also offered a Handel organ concerto. Two choruses took part in the series, the Harvard Summer School chorus with G. Wallace Woodworth conducting, and the Apollo Club of Boston with Wheeler Beckett conducting.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 13 1942

Miss Dusser De Barenne Announces Wedding Plans

Only Members of Families Will Attend Next Thursday's Ceremony in Pittsfield, Mass.—Corbins Going to Maine

The Rev. James E. Gregg, retired minister of the First Congregational Church, Pittsfield, Mass., will officiate on next Thursday afternoon at 12:45 o'clock at the wedding of Miss Dorothea Dusser de Barenne, formerly of this city, daughter of the late Dr. J. G. Dusser de Barenne, professor of neurophysiology at the Yale Medical School, to Mr. Jerome D. Greene, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The ceremony will take place in the home of the brother-in-law and sister of the prospective bride, Dr. and Mrs. D. Crosby Greene, Jr., in Pittsfield, Mass.

Doctor Greene, who is a nephew of the bridegroom-elect, expects to give his sister-in-law in marriage, if he can obtain leave from Westover Field, Mass., where he is stationed. Neither Miss Dusser de Barenne or Mr. Greene will be attended, and only members of the families will witness the ceremony.

Mr. Greene and his bride will make their home in Garden Street, Cambridge, Mass.

GREAT BARRINGTON
MASS
BERKSHIRE COURIER
8/20/42

FINAL CONCERT SERIES

Russian Benefit Friday Night Nets a Total of Nearly $10,000.

In spite of uncertain weather the largest crowd of the season gathered at Tanglewood last Friday evening for the Russian War Relief benefit when the Music Center orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky presented the first concert performance in the country of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony. Many notables were present among the 5000 persons at the benefit which raised a total of nearly $10,000 for Russian War Relief. Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, Maxim M. Litvinoff, Soviet ambassador to the United States, and Mrs. Litvinoff put in an appearance.

At the manifestation, which followed the student programs in the various Center departments, Miss Dorothy Thompson, noted columnist, emphasized the importance of aid to Russia so that that country may be kept in the war for the present and spoke of the need for an immediate second front. Edward C. Carter, chairman of Russian Relief, also spoke and delivered a message from Dr. Koussevitzky.

The impressive presentation of the Shostakovitch symphony was wildly acclaimed by the audience who recalled Dr. Koussevitzky more times than ever before at the Music Shed. Later three distinguished and popular artists, Albert Spalding, violinist, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Dorothy Maynor, soloist, were enthusiastically received in brief recitals. The benefit closed with the drawing for winners on numerous prizes donated to the cause.

Last week-end marked the final concert program of the Music Center which this year was sponsored by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Dr. Koussevitzky, in making a fine orchestra from a group of young musicians in the course of a few weeks, has won new honor for himself as well as the students. The enthusiastic audiences at the concerts the past three week-ends have testified both to the skill of the orchestra and the admiration and affection with which the director is regarded.

SYMPHONY THRILLS LOWELL AUDIENCE—Greater Lowell turned out magnificently yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra at Memorial Auditorium, for the benefit of Russian War Relief. In the photo, left to right, are Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner, general co-chairmen; Arthur Fiedler, guest conductor; Mrs. Fiedler, Bernhardt Weiser, guest pianist, and Professor Michael Harpovich of Harvard university, speaker.

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

LOWELL—Happily, as token of appreciation of fine music presented in behalf of a good cause, there was a near-capacity audience in Memorial Auditorium yesterday afternoon to greet Arthur Fiedler and 80 of the musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief, Inc., an organization which is concentrating on supplying our Russian allies with urgently needed medical supplies and aid. That, in effect, is an effort to "keep 'em fighting."

Mr. Fiedler, the musicians of the orchestra, and Bernhard Weiser, solo pianist, gave their services for the occasion. Members of the local concert committee, headed by Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner as co-chairmen, and all who helped to promote the affair so successfully within the short space of two weeks, felt that they could be no less generous. This reviewer would like to pay a tribute of appreciation to each of the long list; but, perforce, in a review of this sort must be content with a blanket endorsement of their work. The fact is, that not for a long time, has there been an effort sponsored by civic organizations that so fully enlisted the aid of all elements in the city without regard to race, politics or creed. And that, in view of the urgency of the cause, was tremendously gratifying. It was proof, too, that our people, and especially the younger generation, appreciated the opportunity to hear good music.

The Relief Appeal

As for the motive of Russian relief the force of the appeal was shown by the generous response to the collection taken up by the picturesque group of young women in Russian peasant costume during the intermission. There was the testimony of one of them, Miss Nancy Robertson, that her basket contained a $10 bill. And all said there were many of other denominations. So there should be an interesting report to make later. The collection was the sequel to a resume of the record of Russia since the Nazi invasion by Professor Michael Karpovich, associate professor of history at Harvard university. Encouraging was his prediction that despite the grave situation in the northern Caucasus, the Russians would keep the armies intact to beat the Nazis in the end. Supplementing his talk was a stirring two-minute appeal by Dr. Claude M. Fuess, headmaster of neighboring Phillips academy, Andover.

The Music

Thus we come to the music. This opened with a stirring performance of "The Star Spangled Banner." Fittingly enough, what was an all-Russian program culminated, as Mr. Fiedler announced with something American as an extra number, "Salute to the Fighting Forces," an arrangement by Peter Bodge, of Boston, of the favorite songs of our military and naval forces that was greeted with warm enthusiasm by the audience, which rose at the climax of "God Bless America."

It was a colorful program of Russian music which Mr. Fiedler had provided for us, for the most part bright and stirring and of strong rhythmic quality. Only when the Glazounov arrangement of the Song of Volga Boatmen was given as an encore was there a reversion to Slavic melancholy. And its plaintive strains clearly touched the hearts of many in the audience.

Rapper and dynamic, Arthur Fiedler brought out the rich qualities of the orchestra to the full in the "Wedding Procession," from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or" and in the merry overture from Glika's opera "Russian and Ludmilla." The third movement from Tschaikowsky's Sixth and last symphony was given with all the fervor and emotion that characterized the last work of the composer. Mr. Fiedler knows how to infuse the main theme in march tempo with pulsating life and movement. Played as his musicians responded to his beat, it was stirring music, thoroughly Russian.

Needless to say, the same composer's "Marche Slav," with the deep tones of the brasses to sound the old Russian hymn, made its customary appeal.

Novel Music

This, including the "Flight of the Bumble Bee" for good measure, with a facile flute to simulate it, was all familiar music. For novelty, here at least, there were the two dance movements by Shostakovitch. Friday at Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitsky, his new Seventh Symphony, was given its first American concert performance. This was written while Leningrad was under the fire of Nazis. Naturally, by report, it is tinged with the composer's thoughts of war and all that it means to his country of toil and tragedy. But the two little dances on yesterday's program were Shostakovitch in a gay mood. To this reviewer the orchestral cackle of the Polka suggested the barnyard.

The ensuing Russian Dance was reminiscent of a rural carnival. Each was cleverly orchestrated in comparatively simple fashion.

Unless we are mistaken, yesterday's performance of the new Piano Concerto by Aram Khatchatourian, was the second in public, the first having been given under the same auspices at the Pops last month. Bernhard Weiser, young American pianist, was the soloist. The composer is a contemporary of Shastokovitch and about the same age and is of Caucasian-Armenian origin. Under Mr. Weiser's nimble fingers and with the well adjusted orchestral background moulded by Mr. Fiedler and his men, this was exciting as contrasted with ingratiating music. To use architectural terms, it suggests the skyscraper or the industrial plant rather than the Parthenon. But there is no denying that it stirs the pulses. Nothing lackadaisical about this concerto, albeit in form at least, it follows the traditional pattern. If the performer pastes the piano, that is what the composer calls for. There is a suggestion of lyricism in the quieter second movement, although one doubts whether it justifies a Boston critic's description as haunting. The furious finale provides brilliant pianistic fireworks and sonorous orchestra background. The obvious difficulties of the score and the rapid-fire pace had no terrors for young Mr. Weiser. He had the technical means for display. And this listener has a notion that, given another medium, the pianist could shine in the more songful mood. At any rate, time will tell whether the popular tunesmiths will transcribe themes for this concerto for the benefit of the lovers of jive. One saw a possibility in one melodious strain in the final movement. Let it be said that Mr. Weiser was warmly applauded by the audience and musicians after his tour de force and on the stage there were the customary handshakes all around.

It ought to be said that Lawrence, Haverhill, Nashua and other cities sent their quotas to the concert. Mrs. Fiedler and friends came up from Boston for the occasion. Previous to the concert, the musicians were entertained at lunch in the auditorium. Immediately after the program they left for Boston where they were due for the last Sunday concert of the season in the evening on the Charles river esplanade.

This Clipping From COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE

12,5

0 1942

Koussevitsky Champion of Shostakovich

When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, the performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics," however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of reputation, Doctor Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to mfiusical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Doctor Koussevitzky gave the first American concept performance of the work here Friday for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center played the concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LAKE WORTH, FLA.
LEADER
AUG

ROYAL LISTENER — Princess Juliana of The Netherlands momentarily forgets the plight of her homeland as she listens to the new Symphony No. 7 by Shostakovitch, conducted by Koussevitsky at Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From ALAMEDA, CALIF.
TIMES-STAR

AUG 25 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANADARKO, OKLA.
NEWS

AUG 25 1942

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES

AUG 27

This Clipping From GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES

AUG 31 1942

Symphony Players Gave Rare Delight In Benefit Concert

ROCKPORT, Aug. 31.—Good music in an art gallery is a treat enjoyed by many on Cape Ann from time to time. Yesterday afternoon's concert by Boston Symphony orchestra members in the Rockport Art association gallery was a worthy addition to past events of this nature, and the more worthy because of ts benefitting of France Forever, the organization of the fighting French, and the sponsoring Art association.

Louis Kronberg, chairman of the committee, was complimented on the success of the occasion, which was indeed a delightful concert of chamber music featuring the unusual combination of violin, oboe and piano. The concerto in C minor by Bach was written for these three instruments, each answering the other in the characteristic style of Bach. Yesterday's performance showed excellent team work on the part of the performers, S. J. Leibovici, violinist; Louis Speyer, oboeist; and Rita LaPlante, pianist.

Miss LaPlante, who is from Salem, opened a group of piano solos with the Chopin Waltz in B minor, which she played with delicacy and charm. Debussy numbers, Reflets dans e'eau and Feux d'artifice, were beautifully done, bringing out the various moods with fine technique and feeling. Her closing number was Bouree fantasque by Chabrier.

Havanaise, by Saint-Saens, revealed Mr. Leibovici's brilliant technique with the violin—delicate harmonics, perfect double stopping and rich tone.

After intermission, when the pictures came in for a share of the attention, the Loeillet Sonata in three movements was played by the trio bringing out quaint old-world charm. Louis Speyer chose for his solo Romance and rondo by Mozart for oboe. The oboe is seldom heard in full length solo, as the extreme sensitiveness of the small reed mouthpiece makes it a very difficult instrument to play, but Mr. Speyer brought out with seeming ease the plaintive, fairylike quality of the instrument and held the rapt attention of the audience.

The program closed with the beautiful sonata for violin and piano by Cesar Franck in four movements. Both artists gave it sympathetic understanding to make it a dramatic and satisfying close to a most enjoyable concert.

E. K.

SYMPHONY THRILLS LOWELL AUDIENCE—Greater Lowell turned out magnificently yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra at Memorial Auditorium, for the benefit of Russian War Relief. In the photo, left to right, are Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner, general co-chairmen; Arthur Fiedler, guest conductor; Mrs. Fiedler, Bernhardt Weiser, guest pianist, and Professor Michael Harpovich of Harvard university, speaker.

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

LOWELL—Happily, as token of appreciation of fine music presented in behalf of a good cause, there was a near-capacity audience in Memorial Auditorium yesterday afternoon to greet Arthur Fiedler and 80 of the musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief, Inc., an organization which is concentrating on supplying our Russian allies with urgently needed medical supplies and aid. That, in effect, is an effort to "keep 'em fighting."

Mr. Fiedler, the musicians of the orchestra, and Bernhard Weiser, solo pianist, gave their services for the occasion. Members of the local concert committee, headed by Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner as co-chairmen, and all who helped to promote the affair so successfully within the short space of two weeks, felt that they could be no less generous. This reviewer would like to pay a tribute of appreciation to each of the long list; but, perforce, in a review of this sort must be content with a blanket endorsement of their work. The fact is, that not for a long time, has there been an effort sponsored by civic organizations that so fully enlisted the aid of all elements in the city without regard to race, politics or creed. And that, in view of the urgency of the cause, was tremendously gratifying. It was proof, too, that our people, and especially the younger generation, appreciated the opportunity to hear good music.

The Relief Appeal

As for the motive of Russian relief the force of the appeal was shown by the generous response to the collection taken up by the picturesque group of young women in Russian peasant costume during the intermission. There was the testimony of one of them, Miss Nancy Robertson, that her basket contained a $10 bill. And all said there were many of other denominations. So there should be an interesting report to make later. The collection was the sequel to a resume of the record of Russia since the Nazi invasion by Professor Michael Karpovich, associate professor of history at Harvard university. Encouraging was his prediction that despite the grave situation in the northern Caucasus, the Russians would keep the armies intact to beat the Nazis in the end. Supplementing his talk was a stirring two-minute appeal by Dr. Claude M. Fuess, headmaster of neighboring Phillips academy, Andover.

The Music

Thus we come to the music. This opened with a stirring performance of "The Star Spangled Banner." Fittingly enough, what was an all-Russian program culminated, as Mr. Fiedler announced with something American as an extra number, "Salute to the Fighting Forces," an arrangement by Peter Bodge, of Boston, of the favorite songs of our military and naval forces that was greeted with warm enthusiasm by the audience, which rose at the climax of "God Bless America."

It was a colorful program of Russian music which Mr. Fiedler had provided for us, for the most part bright and stirring and of strong rhythmic quality. Only when the Glazounov arrangement of the Song of Volga Boatmen was given as an encore was there a reversion to Slavic melancholy. And its plaintive strains clearly touched the hearts of many in the audience.

Dapper and dynamic, Arthur Fiedler brought out the rich qualities of the orchestra to the full in the "Wedding Procession," from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or" and in the merry overture from Glika's opera "Russlan and Ludmilla." The third movement from Tschaikowsky's Sixth and last symphony was given with all the fervor and emotion that characterized the last work of the composer. Mr. Fiedler knows how to infuse the main theme in march tempo with pulsating life and movement. Played as his musicians responded to his beat, it was stirring music, thoroughly Russian.

Needless to say, the same composer's "Marche Slav," with the deep tones of the brasses to sound the old Russian hymn, made its customary appeal.

Novel Music

This, including the "Flight of the Bumble Bee" for good measure, with a facile flute to simulate it, was all familiar music. For novelty, here at least, there were the two dance movements by Shostakovitch. Friday at Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitsky, his new Seventh Symphony, was given its first American concert performance. This was written while Leningrad was under the fire of Nazis. Naturally, by report, it is tinged with the composer's thoughts of war and all that it means to his country of toil and tragedy. But the two little dances on yesterday's program were Shostakovitch in a gay mood. To this reviewer the orchestral cackle of the Polka suggested the barnyard.

The ensuing Russian Dance was reminiscent of a rural carnival. Each was cleverly orchestrated in comparatively simple fashion.

Unless we are mistaken, yesterday's performance of the new Piano Concerto by Aram Khatchatourian, was the second in public, the first having been given under the same auspices at the Pops last month. Bernhard Weiser, young American pianist, was the soloist. The composer is a contemporary of Shastokovitch and about the same age and is of Caucasian-Armenian origin. Under Mr. Weiser's nimble fingers and with the well adjusted orchestral background moulded by Mr. Fiedler and his men, this was [illegible] delicat—has seen the British, for example, burn our national capital, has seen rebels advancing towards Washington, has been through the vale of despair known in our history as Valley Forge.

Japan, on the other hand, has never known defeat. Her first intimation of defeat came when Doolittle's angels flew over Tokio. Now, however, with the Yanks rolling on on the Road Back Ja[illegible] lyricism in the quieter second movement, although one doubts whether it justifies a Boston critic's description as haunting. The furious finale provides brilliant pianistic fireworks and sonorous orchestra background. The obvious difficulties of the score and the rapid-fire pace had no terrors for young Mr. Weiser. He had the technical means for display. And this listener has a notion that, given another medium, the pianist could shine in the more songful mood. At any rate, time will tell whether the popular tunesmiths will transcribe themes for this concerto for the benefit of the lovers of jive. One saw a possibility in one melodious strain in the final movement. Let it be said that Mr. Weiser was warmly applauded by the audience and musicians after his tour de force and on the stage there were the customary handshakes all around.

It ought to be said that La[illegible]

This Clipping From LAKE WORTH, FLA.
LEADER
AUG

ROYAL LISTENER — Princess Juliana of The Netherlands momentarily forgets the plight of her homeland as she listens to the new Symphony No. 7 by Shostakovitch, conducted by Koussevitsky at Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From ALAMEDA, CALIF.
TIMES-STAR
AUG 25 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANADARKO, OKLA.
NEWS
AUG 25 1942

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES
[illegible]

This Clipping From GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE
AUG 29 1942

This Clipping From COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
[illegible]1942

Koussevitsky Champion of Shostakovich

When some music critics panned the seventh symphony of Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovich, they were criticizing the work of a "genius who possesses the most tremendous appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra so appraised the young Russian musician during an interview today in which he took sharp issue with some of the critics who found fault with the symphony.

Written during the recent siege of Leningrad, with struggle and victory of the city's toiling citizens as its theme, the performed for the first time in America over the radio two weeks ago, the symphony drew some critical comment as being "banal," "uneven," and "program music." Others said it "contained tricks," "lacked proportion," and was "anti-climatic." Many other critics," however, praised it unreservedly.

Waving a passionate hand of reputation, Doctor Koussevitzky said that "musicians and critics who make such strong criticism today will strongly regret in the nearest future what they have said, for to criticize the work of a man who is without doubt a genius, one must listen not once but many times. It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses."

"No one since Beethoven," he added, "has had the aesthetic sense, the approach to mfiusical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal."

Doctor Koussevitzky gave the first American concept performance of the work here Friday for the benefit of Russian war relief. The student orchestra of the Berkshire music center played the concert.

This Clipping From GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES
AUG 31 1942

Symphony Players Gave Rare Delight In Benefit Concert

ROCKPORT, Aug. 31.—Good music in an art gallery is a treat enjoyed by many on Cape Ann from time to time. Yesterday afternoon's concert by Boston Symphony orchestra members in the Rockport Art association gallery was a worthy addition to past events of this nature, and the more worthy because of ts benefitting of France Forever, the organization of the fighting French, and the sponsoring Art association.

Louis Kronberg, chairman of the committee, was complimented on the success of the occasion, which was indeed a delightful concert of chamber music featuring the unusual combination of violin, oboe and piano. The concerto in C minor by Bach was written for these three instruments, each answering the other in the characteristic style of Bach. Yesterday's performance showed excellent team work on the part of the performers, S. J. Leibovici, violinist; Louis Speyer, oboeist; and Rita LaPlante, pianist.

Miss LaPlante, who is from Salem, opened a group of piano solos with the Chopin Waltz in B minor, which she played with delicacy and charm. Debussy numbers, Reflets dans e'eau and Feux d'artifice, were beautifully done, bringing out the various moods with fine technique and feeling. Her closing number was Bouree fantasque by Chabrier.

Havanaise, by Saint-Saens, revealed Mr. Leibovici's brilliant technique with the violin—delicate harmonics, perfect double stopping and rich tone.

After intermission, when the pictures came in for a share of the attention, the Loeillet Sonata in three movements was played by the trio bringing out quaint old-world charm. Louis Speyer chose for his solo Romance and rondo by Mozart for oboe. The oboe is seldom heard in full length solo, as the extreme sensitiveness of the small reed mouthpiece makes it a very difficult instrument to play, but Mr. Speyer brought out with seeming ease the plaintive, fairylike quality of the instrument and held the rapt attention of the audience.

The program closed with the beautiful sonata for violin and piano by Cesar Franck in four movements. Both artists gave it sympathetic understanding to make it a dramatic and satisfying close to a most enjoyable concert.

E. . K.

This Clipping From TYLER, TEXAS
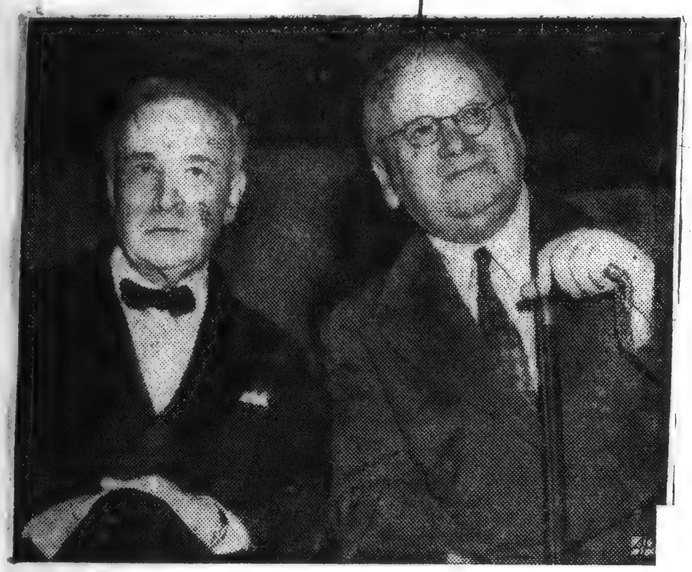
TELEGRAPH

SEP 3 - 1942

126



LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 29 1942

This Clipping From SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 29 1942
This Clipping From MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 29 1942
This Clipping From ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 29 1942
This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, OHIO
JOURNAL

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From SHREVEPORT, LA.
JOURNAL

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

AUG 31 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTON, KAN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From DOVER, N. H.
FOSTER'S DEMOCRAT

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From BLOOMSBURG, PA.
MORNING PRESS

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From McCOMB, ILL.
JOURNAL

AUG 31 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
SUN

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From SALISBURY, N. C.
POST

31 1942

This Clipping From DANVILLE, VA.
REGISTER

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From WISCONSIN RAPIDS, WIS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From FARIBAULT, MINN.
NEWS

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

AUG 31 1942
This Clipping From FULTON, MO.
SUN GAZETTE

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From MENOMINEE, MICH.
HERALD-LEADER

AUG 31 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 31 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM CHEROKEE, IA.
TIMES

342

THIS CLIPPING FROM TRENTON, MO.
REPUBLICAN-TIMES

SEP 1 - 1942
This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
ARK. DEMOCRAT

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER

SEP 1 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM TRENTON, MO.
REPUBLICAN-TIMES

SEP 1 - 1942
This Clipping From SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From JOPLIN, MO.
NEWS-HERALD

SEP 1 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM PARIS, TEX.
NEWS

SEP 1 - 1942
This Clipping From FLORENCE, S. C.
NEWS

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
GAZETTE-BULLETIN

SEP 1 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM MOBERLY, MO.
Monitor Index & Democrat

1942
This Clipping From NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

SEP 1 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM BARTLESVILLE, OKLA.
EXAMINER

SEP 1 - 1942
This Clipping From GALVESTON, TEX.
NEWS

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From GREENVILLE, TEX.
BANNER

SEP 1 - 1942

This Clipping From ROME, N. Y.
SENTINEL

SEP 1 - 1942
This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

SEP 2 - 1942

This Clipping From CORNING, N. Y.
LEADER

SEP 2 - 1942
This Clipping From WEBSTER CITY, IOWA
FREEMAN-JOURNAL

SEP 2 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM CLINTON, MASS.
ITEM

SEP 2 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

SEP 2 - 1942

This Clipping From
FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.
OBSERVER

SEP 2 - 1942
This Clipping From EDINBURG, TEXAS VALLEY REVIEW

SEP 2 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM
[illegible]

SEP 2 - 1942
This Clipping From ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.
TELEGRAM

SEP 2 - 1942

This Clipping From
[illegible]

SEP 2 - 1942
This Clipping From LACONIA, N. H.
CITIZEN

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From LACONIA, N. H.
CITIZEN

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS
TIMES

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From TYLER, TEXAS
TELEGRAPH

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

SEP 3 - 1942

This Clipping From CASPER, WYO.
TRIBUNE HERALD

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From DENISON, TEXAS
HERALD

SEP 3 - 1942
This Clipping From PUEBLO, COLO.
CHIEFTAIN

SEP 4 - 1942
This Clipping From GREAT BEND, KAN.
TRIBUNE

SEP 4 - 1942
This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

SEP 4 - 1942
This Clipping From BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

SEP 4 - 1942
This Clipping From ALTOONA, PA.
TRIBUNE

SEP 4 - 1942
This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1942
This Clipping From EL DORADO, KANS.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1942
THIS CLIPPING FROM SALAMANCA, N. Y.
REPUBLICAN PRESS

SEP 5 - 1942
This Clipping From REDWOOD CITY, CALIF.
TRIBUNE

SEP 5 - 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.
NONPAREIL

SEP 6 - 1942

MERCHANTVILLE, N.J.
NEWS
8/27/42

MUSICAL NOTE

Latest move of Heckler of Happiness James C. Petrillo, president of American Federation of Musicians, was to stop the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Rochester, N. Y. The orchestra has been an annual attraction for 40 years but is non-union. Petrillo told the theater to cancel the engagement or suffer the loss of future shows, because union musicians would not play at the house.

EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Information Bulletin

Special Issue — Washington, D. C., August 10, 1942 — 75

SEVENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT PREMIERE

DMITRI SHOSTAKOVICH

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, under whose inspired baton the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given notable interpretations of Shostakovich's Fifth and Sixth Symphonies, stated in a recent interview:

It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses. No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY WILL CONDUCT

The first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, August 14, at Lenox, Massachusetts. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, internationally famed conductor, will direct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a rendition of this latest and most profoundly significant work of the young Soviet composer. The distinguished soloists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will add to the brilliance of the program, which has been dedicated as a Gala Benefit for Russian War Relief.

(continued on page two)

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

OPERATING DEFICIT SAID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

Friends of Conductor Say Showing Satisfactory in View of Transportation Difficulties

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 31—According to an unofficial report in circulation at Stockbridge today, Dr Serge Koussevitzky had a deficit of between $5500 and $6000 from his operation of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood in July and August.

Friends of the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra considered this an excellent showing in view of handicaps, which included gasoline and tire rationing and opposition of Boston Symphony orchestra trustees, who, however, gave the use of Tanglewood to the Koussevitzky Music foundation under which name it was operated this summer. Friends of the conductor said he expects to have the school next year if the orchestra trustees again will give him the use of Tanglewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying at Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm, Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington, widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Brace W. Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York is with Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon, H. E. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr., Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; Mr and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mrs H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, are Lieut and Mrs William Curley, Westover field; Col Robert Baker, Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthur MacGregor and daughter, Paterson, N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheon party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

127

Koussevitsky Leads Students In Two Concerts

Hanson Symphony, Mozart and Tchaikovsky Works Presented in Berkshire

By Robert Lawrence

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—The second week end of the Berkshire Music Festival ended this afternoon with a splendid concert by the student orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 4, in F minor, and two concertti grossi, the traditional B minor, No. 12, for string orchestra of Handel and the recent work for chamber orchestra by the Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu, made up the program. Jesus Maria Sandroma and Bernard Zighera played the two solo piano parts in Martinu's work.

There is time now to discuss last night's concert by the same orchestra at greater length than was possible in yesterday's review. All of the works on the program — Howard Hanson's symphony No. 3: Mozart's concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra (K. 365), with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists; and Brahms's symphony No. 4 in E minor—were brilliantly performed. But any estimate of this concert in retrospect must take, basically, the form of a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky.

Judged not only by his previous achievements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but more essentially by the results that he has achieved with a student orchestra exactly five weeks old, this conductor must be accounted as one of the greatest cultural figures of our time.

Inspires His Players

If doubt still lingers as to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky for inspiring any instrumental body that plays under his guidance, a visit to the present Berkshire festival, which ends with concerts next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, will convince the dissenter of his error. I have been attending the symphonic series at Tanglewood for the last four years since the building of the Music Shed, and never yet, even with the famed Boston Symphony on the platform, have I heard such a thrilling concert here as that of last night.

First of all, it had the spark that can come only from youth—the enthusiasm and receptivity of the young players, who have their careers fresh before them and have not slipped into the deadening ways of routine, and the eternal youth of a conductor whose flame for music has never burned low. Then there was the tone quality, amazingly individual in essence when one considers the brief amount of time that this organiaztion has been in existence.

Brilliantly Performed

The Hanson symphony, which opened the program, went brilliantly. It is easy enough to point out certain derivative passages in this work. Ravel (of the general dance from "Daphnis and Chloe"), Borodin and Mahler—whose Scherzo of the C minor symphony, No. 2, has been incorporated somewhat bodily in Dr. Hanson's tempo Scherzando movement—are unmistakably present. But in a composition that has the breadth and dignity of the Hanson symphony, a lack of complete originality does not always stand as the basis for adverse criticism.

An equally fine performance was given the next work on the program —Mozart's E flat concerto for two pianos. The orchestral accompaniment was first class. In the solo parts, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff acquitted themselves with a full measure of distinction.

With the space at hand, one can do no more in describing the overwhelming performance of the Brahms E Minor Symphony, with which the concert ended, than to speak of it in general terms. Of what moment to single out the powerful coda of the first allegro, the beautifully played slow movement, the most justly paced reading of the scherzo I have yet heard, and the superb sonorities of the final movement, with melting solo passages by the flutist and the three trombones?

No less impressive was the reading of the Handel concerto grosso, which began this afternoon's program. The larghetto, containing one of the most eloquent melodies in all music, received its due, and the other movements were read with fine effect by the string body and solo instruments. It was perhaps a rash choice to follow up the Handel with Martinu's new work in the same form. Comparisons are inevitable. But, inside the limits of its own creative approach, the Martinu concerto is a good one. Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, at the two pianos, played with the dazzling objective style that the score demanded, and they were ably companioned by the orchestra.

EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Information Bulletin

Special Issue — Washington, D. C., August 10, 1942 — 75

SEVENTH SYMPHONY CONCERT PREMIERE

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY WILL CONDUCT

The first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony will be given Friday, August 14, at Lenox, Massachusetts. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, internationally famed conductor, will direct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in a rendition of this latest and most profoundly significant work of the young Soviet composer. The distinguished soloists, Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding will add to the brilliance of the program, which has been dedicated as a Gala Benefit for Russian War Relief.

(continued on page two)

DMITRI SHOSTAKOVICH

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, under whose inspired baton the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given notable interpretations of Shostakovich's Fifth and Sixth Symphonies, stated in a recent interview:

It is my deepest feeling that there never has been a composer since Beethoven with such tremendous appeal to the masses. No one since Beethoven has had the esthetic sense, the approach to musical material that Shostakovich has. He is the greatest master of musical wealth; he is the master of what he desires to do; he has melody without end; his language is as rich as the world; his emotion is absolutely universal.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

OPERATING DEFICIT SAID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

Friends of Conductor Say Showing Satisfactory in View of Transportation Difficulties

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 31—According to an unofficial report in circulation at Stockbridge today, Dr Serge Koussevitzky had a deficit of b[illegible]00 and $6000 from his operation of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood in July and August.

Friends of the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra considered this an excellent showing in view of handicaps, which included gasoline and tire rationing and opposition of Boston Symphony orchestra trustees, who, however, gave the use of Tanglewood to the Koussevitzky Music foundation under which name it was operated this summer. Friends of the conductor said he expects to have the school next year if the orchestra trustees again will give him the use of Tanglewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying a Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Brace W Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York with Mrs William Felton Barrett a Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon H. E. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; M and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mr H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington are Lieut and Mrs William Curle Westover field; Col Robert Bake Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthu MacGregor and daughter, Paterso N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheo party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is th guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naum keag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

127

Koussevitsky Leads Students In Two Concerts

Hanson Symphony, Mozart and Tchaikovsky Works Presented in Berkshire

By Robert Lawrence

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The second week end of the Berkshire Music Festival ended this afternoon with a splendid concert by the student orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Tchaikovsky's symphony No. 4, in F minor, and two concertti grossi, the traditional B minor, No. 12, for string orchestra of Handel and the recent work for chamber orchestra by the Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu, made up the program. Jesus Maria Sandroma and Bernard Zighera played the two solo piano parts in Martinu's work.

There is time now to discuss last night's concert by the same orchestra at greater length than was possible in yesterday's review. All of the works on the program — Howard Hanson's symphony No. 3; Mozart's concerto in E flat major for two pianos and orchestra (K. 365), with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as soloists; and Brahms's symphony No. 4 in E minor—were brilliantly performed. But any estimate of this concert in retrospect must take, basically, the form of a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky.

Judged not only by his previous achievements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but more essentially by the results that he has achieved with a student orchestra exactly five weeks old, this conductor must be accounted as one of the greatest cultural figures of our time.

Inspires His Players

If doubt still lingers as to the genius of Dr. Koussevitzky for inspiring any instrumental body that plays under his guidance, a visit to the present Berkshire festival, which ends with concerts next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, will convince the dissenter of his error. I have been attending the symphonic series at Tanglewood for the last four years since the building of the Music Shed, and never yet, even with the famed Boston Symphony on the platform, have I heard such a thrilling concert here as that of last night.

First of all, it had the spark that can come only from youth—the enthusiasm and receptivity of the young players, who have their careers fresh before them and have not slipped into the deadening ways of routine, and the eternal youth of a conductor whose flame for music has never burned low. Then there was the tone quality, amazingly individual in essence when one considers the brief amount of time that this organiaztion has been in existence.

Brilliantly Performed

The Hanson symphony, which opened the program, went brilliantly. It is easy enough to point out certain derivative passages in this work. Ravel (of the general dance from "Daphnis and Chloe"), Borodin and Mahler—whose Scherzo of the C minor symphony, No. 2, has been incorporated somewhat bodily in Dr. Hanson's tempo Scherzando movement—are unmistakably present. But in a composition that has the breadth and dignity of the Hanson symphony, a lack of complete originality does not always stand as the basis for adverse criticism.

An equally fine performance was given the next work on the program —Mozart's E flat concerto for two pianos. The orchestral accompaniment was first class. In the solo parts, Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff acquitted themselves with a full measure of distinction.

With the space at hand, one can do no more in describing the overwhelming performance of the Brahms E Minor Symphony, with which the concert ended, than to speak of it in general terms. Of what moment to single out the powerful coda of the first allegro, the beautifully played slow movement, the most justly paced reading of the scherzo I have yet heard, and the superb sonorities of the final movement, with melting solo passages by the flutist and the three trombones?

No less impressive was the reading of the Handel concerto grosso, which began this afternoon's program. The larghetto, containing one of the most eloquent melodies in all music, received its due, and the other movements were read with fine effect by the string body and solo instruments. It was perhaps a rash choice to follow up the Handel with Martinu's new work in the same form. Comparisons are inevitable. But, inside the limits of its own creative approach, the Martinu concerto is a good one. Jesus Maria Sanroma and Bernard Zighera, at the two pianos, played with the dazzling objective style that the score demanded, and they were ably companioned by the orchestra.

SHOSTAKOVICH'S SEVENTH SYMPHONY

By Alexei Tolstoi

On March 5, 1942, Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony was performed for the first time in the Bolshoi Academic Theater of the USSR in Kuibyshev. Included in the program was the following article by the renowned Russian writer, Alexei Tolstoi, who was present at the first rehearsal:

One of the world's most perfect musical ensembles, the Orchestra of the Moscow Bolshoi Theater, assembles between the columns of the big foyer. At the conductor's desk stands Samosud in his shirt sleeves, ready for work. Shostakovich, who is sitting just behind, resembles a cross little boy. High above in the gallery the rehearsal audience strains forward, elbows on the oaken rail, and listens spellbound.

Now, after correction of the score, all four movements are to be played. Samosud tosses back his damp hair, gives a sweep of the baton, and the violins begin to sing of the tranquil life of a happy man.

The triumph of the human in mankind is the theme of the Seventh Symphony. Let us try to gain a partial insight into the trend of Shostakovich's musical thought, which led him through the sinister gloom of Leningrad nights, through crashing explosions and the lurid glare of fires, to the creation of this candid work.

At the outbreak of the war an acquaintance of mine remarked, "Self-destroying forces are latent in mankind, and it is still doubtful whether man will remain at the head of the animate world, or whether the future may not bring the extinction of the human race, which will be supplanted by some more perfect creatures—ants, perhaps, of extraordinary proportions."

Shostakovich Not Intimidated

That is the effect fascism has on some people. It reduces them to a state of sheer, ghastly, capitulatory panic. My acquaintance looked back at the glorious path traversed by the human animal from the gnawing of bones in paleolithic caves to the conquest of the air, and was disheartened because he saw only what seemed to him the bitter end of a road—Hitler turning man away from the temples of music, from the august quiet of libraries and laboratories, back to the gnawed bones.

But Shostakovich was not to be intimidated by Hitler. Shostakovich is a Russian and therefore a man of temper. When he is thoroughly angered he is capable of fantastic deeds. To fascism's threat of dehumanizing man he replied with a symphony expressing the triumph of all that is noblest and finest, created by human culture.

The Seventh Symphony had its origin in the spirit of the Russian people, who went forth unhesitatingly to battle with the dark forces of evil. Written during the bombing of Leningrad, it expanded to the dimensions of a titanic work of art comprehensive to people in all lands, because it tells the truth about man in this terrible year of disaster and trial. Transparent in its vast complexity, the Seventh Symphony has an austere and masculine lyrical quality. It presses on toward a future that opens beyond the borderline where the victory of man over beast was won.

Harmony Shattered by War

The violins sing of untroubled bliss wherein lies disaster—of a bliss still blind and restricted as a fledgling that "flutters blithely along a path of ruin." From this contentment emerges, from the depths of unsolved contradictions, the theme of war—brief, cold, clear-cut, not unlike steel.

Resembling at first a simple but ghastly dance, the antics of tame rats to a rat-catcher's piping, the war theme appears in the distance. Then, gathering force like the wind, this theme gradually sways the orchestra, masters it—swelling, rising, gaining in volume. The rat-catcher with his iron rats looms in the distance, presses forward. This is a war which exults in kettle-drums and drums, and draws from the violins shrieks of agony and despair. You sit gripping the oaken rail with nervous fingers and wonder, "Is it all over then? Is everything wrecked and shattered?" Confusion and chaos prevail in the orchestra.

But no! Man proves stronger than the forces of chaos. The strings begin to struggle: harmony of violins and the human voice of the bassoon overpower the rattles of the asses' skins on the drums. The desperate beating of your own heart contributes to the triumph of harmony. The violins resolve the chaos of war and the violence of the uncouth bellowing of cavemen.

The accursed rat-catcher has vanished—swept away into the chasm of time. There are tears in the eyes of some of the violinists as they lower their bows. Reflective and stern after so much loss and desolation is the human voice of the bassoon.

(Continued on page eight)

CONCERT PREMIERE

(Continued from page one)

Many notables will be present, including Ambassador of the USSR and Madame Maxim Litvinov. The sponsoring committee includes Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Gerry Chadwick, Miss Alice Clapp, Mrs. Edward C. Carter, whose husband is national president of Russian War Relief, Inc., Philip Allen, Mrs. John Pratt, Lucien Wulsin, Mrs. Robert Littell, Mrs. Frederick Schenck and Albert Spalding.

The program will begin at 5 P. M. with the "Berkshire Music Center on Parade." Following this there will be a lawn party and supper, after which the main concert will take place.

CABLE GREETINGS FOR CONCERT PREMIERE

For the occasion of the first concert performance in the Western Hemisphere of the Seventh Symphony, the composer cabled the following message to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct:

Gratified that you will conduct my Seventh Symphony on August 14. Happy to learn it has proved of interest to such a master conductor as yourself.

Dmitri Shostakovich.

People's Artist of the USSR, Samuel A. Samosud, who conducted the first Moscow performance of the symphony, Dmitri Shostakovich (right) and Conductor Samuel A. Samosud, on their way to the House of the Trade Unions for the first Moscow performance of the Seventh Symphony.

also cabled a greeting to Dr. Koussevitzky:

On behalf of the Orchestra of the Bolshoi Theatre of the USSR, first to perform Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, and also on my own behalf, I welcome the performance of this composition under your masterly baton the forthcoming August 14. I trust you share the profound satisfaction my colleagues and I experienced in working on this majestic composition. I congratulate you in advance on your undoubted success.

Samosud, Conductor
Orchestra Bolshoi Theatre

"THE SIMPLICITY AND WISDOM OF SHOSTAKOVICH"

By Dr. Serge Koussevitzky

"The darker the night, the brighter the stars."

In the epoch of destruction and world tragedy values are being created which are firm and stable, and part of a supreme and lasting order. In the country where the invading barbarian is inflicting destruction, amid the smoking ruins of peaceful life, one of the greatest creations of musical art has been born.

It is the good fortune of the creator to be able to comprehend his native land—to express its living cultural strength. Only on the soil of cultural consciousness can folk art live, and along side the external struggle and destruction create new, powerful cultural values.

Shostakovich is the bright torch of the Russian people and its creative forces—inexhaustible as the earth itself. That is why his music is so overwhelming and human and can be compared with the universality and humanism of Beethoven's genius, which, like that of Shostakovich, was born in an epoch of world-shattering events. His esthetics may be considered equal to the esthetics of Beethoven.

Having an exceptionally wide scope and freedom of form, which in the Seventh Symphony take on grandiose proportions, Shostakovich never loses the feeling of measure, line and unity. His symphony is as solid as granite. In it we see the freedom of the master who has subordinated his instrument to his craftsmanship. In his hand the unyielding granite is sculptured like pliable wax.

(Continued on page six)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

PERATING DEFICIT AID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

nds of Conductor Say owing Satisfactory in ew of Transportation ficulties t Dispatch to The Republican kshire Hills, Aug. 31—According unofficial report in circulation ckbridge today, Dr Serge Kous- y had a deficit of b[illegible] 000 from his operation of the ire Music center at Tangle- n July and August.

ds of the conductor of the Symphony orchestra consid- s an excellent showing in view dicaps, which included gasoline e rationing and opposition of Symphony orchestra trustees, owever, gave the use of Tan- d to the Koussevitzky Music tion under which name it was d this summer. Friends of the tor said he expects to have hool next year if the orchestra es again will give him the use nglewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying at Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington, widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Bruce W Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York is with Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon H. R. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; Mr and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mrs H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington are Lieut and Mrs William Curley Westover field; Col Robert Baker Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthur MacGregor and daughter, Paterson N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheon party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

GROWTH OF AN ARTIST

By Vera Vassina

In 1925 the First Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich was played in Leningrad. This first big work of the nineteen year old composer strongly impressed the audience by its wonderful combination of youthful freshness and mature artistry. In the history of music there are not many examples of such brilliant debuts. One is reminded of Mendelssohn, who first appeared before the public when he was sixteen years of age with his famous overture, Midsummer Night's Dream, and Glazunov, whose high school uniform astonished the audience that applauded his first symphony. Shostakovich immediately attracted attention and aroused interest.

His First Symphony was preceded by years of study, years of arduous work, of artistic quests. Shostakovich began to study music at the age of nine. His first teacher was his mother, a fine musician. She prepared the boy to enter music school. Dmitri made good progress, and in 1919, at the age of thirteen, was accepted as a student in the piano department of the Leningrad Conservatory of Music, in Professor Rozanova's class. The same year he also began to study composition under Professor Steinberg.

Shostakovich began to compose at a very early age —creative work always having been an organic urge of his nature. Everything that stirred the young boy found expression in his childishly naive but always sincere and ardent musical compositions. His reaction to the war of 1914-1918 found expression in the musical poem, Soldier. The revolutionary events of February and October, 1917 inspired him to compose Revolutionary Symphony and Funeral March To Those Who Died For The Revolution. All this was naive and immature, but already in these childish works one discerns the traits of an artist and citizen which found such forceful expression twenty-five years later in his remarkable Seventh Symphony.

His compositions of the Conservatory period—several miniatures for piano and pieces for string orchestra—lack independence and reflect a variety of influences: Scriabin, Glazunov, and ever more strongly, Prokofiev. In 1923 Shostakovich graduated from Professor Nikolayev's piano-class, and in 1925 from Professor Steinberg's composition class. His graduation work, First Symphony, gained the young composer recognition not only in his own country, but abroad. Outstanding conductors—Stokowski, Klemperer, Bruno Walter—included it in their concerts.

At the same time Shostakovich continued working as a pianist. Today the composer Shostakovich almost entirely eclipses Shostakovich the pianist. Yet he is one of the finest Russian pianists. Trained in Professor Nikolayev's school, he, with the pianists Vladimir Sofronitsky and Maria Yudina, is one of its most interesting representatives. At the present time he plays only his own compositions, and also appears in traditional annual concerts of Nikolayev's pupils.

The path of Shostakovich as a composer, so boldly and confidently initiated by his First Symphony, subsequently became more intricate and tortuous. The years separating the First Symphony from the Fifth Symphony, composed in 1937, were marked by an extraordinary productivity and variety: three symphonies, two operas—an adaptation of Gogol's Nose and Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk (after Leskov's work) —three ballets, Bolt, Golden Age, and Clear Brook; music for stage productions, motion pictures, pieces for piano and chamber music.

Outstanding among his works during those years are his compositions for films, Counter-plan, One Woman, Golden Mountains, and The Maxim Trilogy. His music for the Maxim Trilogy is especially fascinating. Here are old familiar songs of the working class suburbs known throughout Russia, come to life again in a wonderfully fresh and poetic treatment.

After a long quest the composer has found his proper path—that of grand art based on lofty ideas. The work of his Fifth Symphony is of great philosophical profundity and significance. "The theme of this symphony," says the composer, "is the assertion of personality. It was Man with all his emotions and experiences that I saw as a focus of design in this work, which is lyrical in conception from the beginning to the end." In this symphony, Shostakovich in musical images and with stirring profundity and cogency reveals Man's inner world of tormenting doubts, dreams, aspirations. In the end a path of joy is found. The symphony appeals to very wide circles. Musicians, the writer Alexei Tolstoi, and the flier Mikhail Gromov, all expressed admiration in equally enthusiastic terms.

The Fifth Symphony was followed by works in the nature of lyrical intermezzi: String Quartet and the Sixth Symphony, fascinating for their freshness and youthful joy of life, but which do not deal with profound and significant problems as does the Fifth Symphony.

Shostakovich scored a new and great artistic success in his Piano Quintet, which was first played in November, 1940 and which won him the Stalin Prize. This work proved a triumph in concert halls such as has hardly been the case with any other modern work of chamber music. Not a single performance of the Quintet passed without the scherzo and finale being encored, and in one case the audience insisted on the entire Quintet being played over again from the beginning to the end. The Quintet is rather intricate in style with a wide use of polyphony combined with a wonderful clarity of general design.

Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, composed in besieged Leningrad, is his latest contribution to the music of the democratic world.

A TRIUMPH OF RUSSIAN MUSIC

By Eugene Petrov

The following article was written by the brilliant Soviet author a few months before his death in the last days of the heroic defense of Sevastopol:

Recently I talked with a German prisoner, Reinhard Reif, who before the war had taught the theory of music in the Conservatory of Kassel. Reif is a pianist and violinist, and a typical young Hitlerite, brought up like hundreds of thousands of other young Hitlerities. We began talking of music. I soon discovered that this Hitlerite professional musician was a complete ignoramus in matters of music. He knew only more or less thoroughly German classical music. He was entirely unacquainted with Italian music, had only the vaguest idea of Russian music, and was firmly convinced that there is no music in France and that the French have no ability to compose.

Musical Concentration Camps

These are frightful facts. They mean that from his earliest years a creatively gifted youth had been put in a musical concentration camp where only one music—German—was allowed to exist. He was separated by barbed wire from the rest of the world, from all else that had been created by man in the sphere of music, from all the beauty of the world. Hitler had got what he wanted—he had reared in his stifling incubator an ignoramus convinced that all the peoples of the world are fit only to be German slaves. Therefore one can murder them with indifference and plunder and destroy their homes. It is possible, without thinking about it at all, to destroy them as a boot destroys small insects on a road.

Hitler took the heart out of the breast of a German youth and inserted instead a piece of rusty iron; he drowned the youth's brain with concrete. The youth stopped feeling and thinking. He was deprived of that without which a two-footed being cannot be considered a man, even if it is taught to wear trousers, to shoot, to clean its teeth, and to cry "halt" and "zuruck."

And so it was that millions of these young men, unable to feel or think, were thrown into our land by the hand of an evil maniac.

Men Soulless as Machines

With an iron clanking—one-two, left, right— machines as intelligent as men and men as soulless as machines approached our frontiers. The idiotic pomposity with which they marched—left, right, one-two—might have seemed comic if they had not been coming to kill. The bloody sun of June 22 rose.

So opens the theme of war in Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony.

It arises after a long, slow and serene harmony that culminates the introductory theme. It arises unexpectedly, yet, at the same time, inevitably. It begins with a whisper of drums; and to the accompaniment of this whisper, after a violin pizzicato, some sort of reed quietly pipes an idiotically simple, yet intricate, jocular, yet terrifying, melody. You still don't realize that this is war, but the composer already has clutched your heart in his masterly hand.

The melody is repeated again and then again, a fifth, a sixth and a tenth time. It assumes an integument of iron and blood. It shakes the hall. It shakes the world. An iron machine runs over human bones and you hear them crack. You clench your fists. You want to shoot at this monster with a zinc snout that is marching down upon you, inexorably and methodically.

When it seems that nothing more can save you, when the limit of might is reached of this monster which cannot think or feel, and there is no force on earth which can stop it—behold a musical miracle takes place, which as far as I know is without parallel in the world's symphonic literature.

A few bars and in the middle of its career, when the orchestra is at its full pitch of intensity, the idiotically simple, yet intricate and jocular, yet terrifying theme of fascism triumphant breaks off and is replaced by a theme, direct and serene and overwhelming, the theme of resistance.

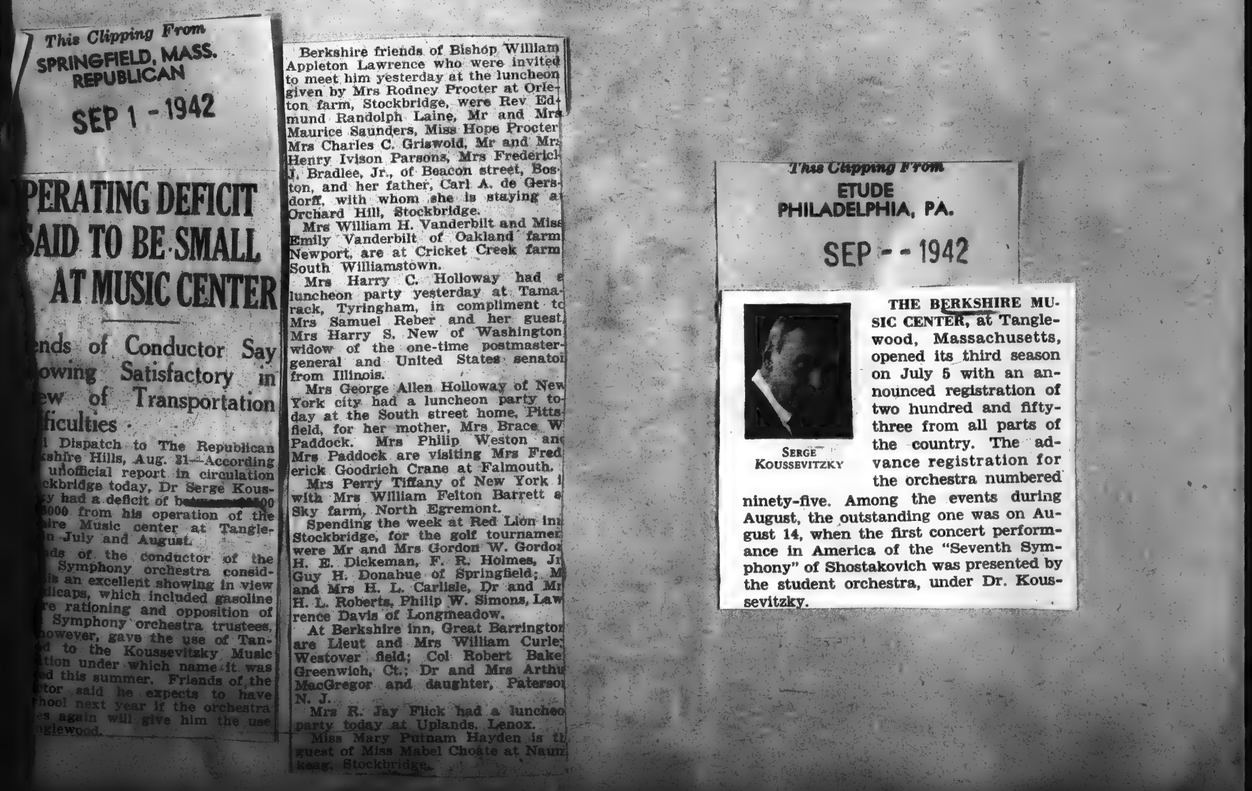
Grandeur of Resistance

The composer holds you firmly by the heart. If anything he presses it still tighter. But now you experience neither anxiety nor fear. Now you are stirred to your depth by the grandeur of the battle between men who burn books and men who revere them; between men who deny education to all men and men who strive to make education the possession of all; between men who destroy music in their own country and men who foster and promote music; between the forces of evil and the forces of good.

This battle is majestic and it is expressed by the orchestra with supreme energy. Nothing can surpass it. It is the ultimate limit of intensity.

But the composer does not let go of your heart. He even presses it a little tighter. Again a few bars and the theme of conflict is transformed with miraculous speed into a theme of woe—profound, courageous woe of the people. It is a memorial to those who have fallen in the battle for the motherland, a funeral march. It does not evoke tears. The grief is too deep for tears. The march evokes too many thoughts and feelings to evoke tears which are a sign of weakness. No, this is not the time for weakness! No weakness, not even for a minute, not even for a second! The requiem leaves you with dry eyes and clenched fists.

Now the theme subsides and the reed pipes softly —again that idiotically simple, yet intricate, jocular and terrifying melody.



This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

PERATING DEFICIT
SAID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

nds of Conductor Say owing Satisfactory in ew of Transportation fficulties

Dispatch to The Republican shire Hills, Aug. 31—According unofficial report in circulation ckbridge today, Dr Serge Kous-y had a deficit of be[illegible]00 000 from his operation of the ire Music center at Tanglen July and August.
nds of the conductor of the Symphony orchestra considis an excellent showing in view dicaps, which included gasoline e rationing and opposition of Symphony orchestra trustees, however, gave the use of Tan-
d to the Koussevitzky Music tion under which name it was d this summer. Friends of the tor said he expects to have hool next year if the orchestra es again will give him the use glewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying at Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Brace W Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York is with Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon H. E. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; Mr and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mrs H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington are Lieut and Mrs William Curley Westover field; Col Robert Baker Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthur MacGregor and daughter, Paterson N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheon party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Remember, this is only the beginning! A long and bloody path has still to be traversed. It has still to be traversed. Remember, the enemy is strong! He is here. Remember!

The first part of the symphony is finished. It lasted half an hour, but it seemed to me only three or four minutes.

I raised my head and saw the empty Hall of Columns where the biers of Lenin and Maxim Gorky had stood. The platform was still crowded with the large orchestra. Samosud, the famous conductor, was wiping his forehead with his handkerchief and excitedly explaining something to the first violinist.

In the midst of the empty hall, somewhere in the tenth or eleventh row, his elbows propped on the back of a seat, sat a very pale and very slender man with a sharp nose wearing very light horn-rimmed glasses and with auburn bristling hair cut student fashion. Suddenly he sprang up, catching his foot in the seat, and with a sliding gait he almost ran towards the orchestra. He came to an abrupt stop at the conductor's stand. The conductor stooped down and they entered into warm conversation.

It was Dmitri Shostakovich. He began writing the Seventh Symphony in Leningrad in August, 1941. On September 3, the first movement was ready. The second movement was completed on September 17 and the third by the end of that month. Then Shostakovich left Leningrad by plane. The finale was written in Kuibyshev in December.

The charm of the music is that it leaves complete freedom to one's impressions. Even the so-called program music, which sometimes delights and entrances one, causes one to seek in vain for the program. But never yet have I heard any musical work with such a clear, definite and firm program as Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony.

Whether Shostakovich will write the program for this new symphony or not I do not know. And this is not important. The first movement needs no interpretation. As to the second, the scherzo, and the third, the andante, all I can say about them is that they are just as brilliant as the first. Everybody who hears them will interpret them as his feelings suggest.

I don't know what they meant to say. All I know is what arose in my imagination and what I felt and experienced. I saw mothers bidding farewell to their sons and tender brides to their sweethearts leaving for the front. I saw the tenseness of cities frozen in expectation of the invisible monster with the zinc snout who was flying toward them in the black night sky. I saw staunch men and weak men. I saw beams of searchlights and the dotted courses of tracer bullets reflected in the windows of high buildings. Again I saw the roads of the war areas and experienced that indescribable feeling that seizes a man when he crosses that vague and indeterminate line called the front. I saw the bodies of Red Army soldiers with their heads bent forever to the ground and turned toward the enemy; and the field dressing station and the surgeon with his blood-covered rubber gloves and the nurse bending over a hero as he utters his last breath; and the subdued Russian landscape, and children, and human passions, and tenderness and grief and smiles and all that which filled our minds and hearts in the early months of the war.

And the heart was tightly held all the time by the hand of the thin, pale man with reddish hair who sat alone in the midst of the huge empty hall. For the last time he pressed the heart more tightly still with his mighty and caressing hand, until it seemed impossible to breathe from torment and happiness.

Then came the finale. The finale that will be played in Red Square by an orchestra of 5,000 on the day of our victory!

A Triumph of Truth

It is a triumph of truth. A triumph of a man who thinks and feels.

Just for its sound, apart from its meaning, the music is so good that one does not want to part with it. One wants to hear it again and again. One wants to have it at home—to have it always with one.

Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony is a perfect creation. It is a triumph of Russian music. It is a remarkable continuation of both Tchaikowsky and Musorgsky, so different in every way, common only in their genius. At the same time, it is a universal musical experience perceived by an astonishing Russian composer, a noble and intelligent musician who was reared by the Soviet country in the spirit of respect and love for all the world's culture.

And what has Germany given to the world for the last several decades? Hitler is the end of that gloomy road upon which Wilhelm II. set out. Hilter has got what he wanted. A youth brought up in the spirit of hatred for other nations is impotent to create even the semblance of art. More than that, this youth is so ignorant it does not even know of the existence of the world's great art.

The Soviet Union has cared for and multiplied the incalculable riches of culture it inherited. The Soviet country is proud of Shostakovich, as an exacting artist is proud of the work he creates after years of hard and patient toil.

WISDOM OF SHOSTAKOVICH

(Continued from page three)

For the performance of such a symphony as the Shostakovich Seventh, at a moment when the life and future of the cultural world are being decided on the battlefields of the suffering Russian land, an inner unity is necessary. Those who perform it must comprehend the four dimensions—height, length, breadth and depth—of the creating genius of Shostakovich.

His music flows from the heart of the creator to the heart of the listener. In this is his simplicity, and in this is his wisdom.

The first Moscow performance of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony in the Hall of Columns, House of the Trade Unions, under the direction of People's Artist of the USSR Samuel A. Samosud.

SHOSTAKOVICH SPEAKS FOR OUR PEOPLE

By Constantin Finn

Young Soviet Author

Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony is an event in Moscow's life. The Muscovites are very fond of music. Moscow's concert halls are always crowded. The Muscovites are very exacting. They have been pampered with regard to concerts—all the year round they are offered a variety of them.

The Muscovites have grown enamored of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony. They are enthusiastic about it. Only people enamored and enthusiastic can cheer and applaud as Moscow audiences cheer and applaud the composer Shostakovich. These ovations, I might say, are of a special kind. They are brought about not only because of the musical merits of the Seventh Symphony, which are undoubtedly extremely great. They are explained by the fact that the composer here speaks on behalf of his people. He speaks of our country's hatred for the enemy and of the coming of victory.

Yes, this lean young composer, Dmitri Shostakovich, speaks on behalf of his mighty people. He succeeded in translating the voice of his people into the sounds of the powerful Seventh Symphony. That is why the people have appreciated and recognized him —that is why his music is great national music.

No one and nothing can prevent the people from listening to this music. No one and nothing dares to interrupt this passionate communion of the Russian composer with the Russian people. Actually there were attempts to interfere. Men in airplanes, murderers, bombers, were trying to raid Moscow just then. The swastika was in the air. The swastika hates music, just as it hates all that is beautiful.

The audience was listening to the music with bated breath. The orchestra was playing the fourth movement—the finale. Its sounds—bitter and triumphant, soft and powerful—are unique in expressing clearly the sentiments which Shostakovich wanted to express. It seemed that no other sounds could express these sentiments. They are the exact sounds conceived by a great heart. That is why all understand this music. Why all listen with bated breath.

A man in military uniform appeared in the orchestra. He was an air raid warden. All knew his errand. There was an air raid warning. But all remained seated—no one stirred. The warden's position became rather embarrassing. He looked at Samosud, the conductor, but the latter went on conducting, passionate and inspired.

What could the warden do? He couldn't think of interrupting the symphony. He became a listener himself.

The orchestra was playing the solemn ode to the heroes of the Patriotic War repelling the foreign invaders. The audience was listening rapturously to Shostakovich's music. The ode by the orchestra was growing in volume. Could anybody interrupt that? The man in the military uniform took a vacant chair and sat down. He sat in the orchestra until the symphony was finished. When the last note sounded he got up, raised his hand and said, "Citizens, the air raid warnings have been sounded."

"We know," voices replied from the audience. They began to applaud Shostakovich. The oration lasted 20 minutes. Only then did the people calmly and unhurriedly began to disperse from the Hall of Columns.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

PERATING DEFICIT AID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

nds of Conductor Say owing Satisfactory in w of Transportation ficulties

Dispatch to The Republican shire Hills, Aug. 31—According unofficial report in circulation ckbridge today, Dr Serge Kous- y had a deficit of be[illegible]00 000 from his operation of the ire Music center at Tangle- in July and August.

nds of the conductor of the Symphony orchestra consid- s an excellent showing in view dicaps, which included gasoline re rationing and opposition of Symphony orchestra trustees, however, gave the use of Tan- od to the Koussevitzky Music ation under which name it was ed this summer. Friends of the ctor said he expects to have chool next year if the orchestra es again will give him the use nglewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying at Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Brace W Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York with Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon H. E. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; Mr and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mrs H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington are Lieut and Mrs William Curley Westover field; Col Robert Baker Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthur MacGregor and daughter, Paterson N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheon party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE SEVENTH SYMPHONY IN SIBERIA

July 9 marked the Fete of Musical Culture in Novosibirsk, Siberia. Shortly before that date Dmitri Shostakovich arrived to take part in the rehearsals of his Seventh Symphony by the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra, temporarily domiciled in Novosibirsk.

Under the baton of the celebrated Soviet conductor, Eugene Mravinsky, the Philharmonic Orchestra gave a consummate rendition of the Seventh Symphony. The hall was crowded, and the Novosiberians warmly greeted Shostakovich, as well as the brilliant performance of the orchestra.

In an interview for the press Shostakovich said:

"It was with great and pleasant anticipation I awaited the meeting with the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra, as my whole musical career has been bound up with this group. Sixteen years ago the Leningrad Orchestra first played my First Symphony, and ever since my close association with this body has been uninterrupted. All my symphonic works were first performed by this orchestra, and in these artists I have always found attentive and sensitive friends and inspired and talented performers.

"Circumstances were such that during the past twelve months we have been domiciled in different cities—the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra worked in Novosibirsk and I in Kuibyshev. The first performance of the Seventh Symphony was given in Kuibyshev by the orchestra of the Bolshoi Theater under the baton of Samuel A. Samosud, after which it was performed five times in Moscow. Upon learning that the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra contemplated performing my symphony, I immediately took a plane for Novosibirsk.

"Novosibirsk is a large industrial center in Siberia, and the city lives a tense and throbbing life. Its factories and mills turn out formidable products for the front. Its cultural institutions are working on the development of science and art. From the first days of my stay in Novosibirsk I sensed a tense creative pulsation in this splendid city. Then the orchestra began rehearsing my work under the supervision of Eugene Mravinsky—one of the finest Soviet music conductors and an unfailing performer and brilliant interpreter of my compositions.

"I had not heard the performance of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra and its chief conductor, Mravinsky, for about a year, and their work on rehearsals of the Seventh Symphony was really magnificent. Within a short period the orchestra rehearsed it to perfection, and on July 9 gave its first performance in Novosibirsk.

"It is difficult for me to speak of what I experienced and of my emotions in connection with this concert and the entire rehearsal period. The main thing is that this orchestra has made great progress and its qualities have vastly increased. In general it was the same orchestra I knew on the Neva's banks in Leningrad, with the exception that in the last twelve months it has achieved a tremendous success. And this is due to the Philharmonic's leaders—art director Sollertinsky and chief conductor Mravinsky.

"In these strenuous days of the great Patriotic War we wage against our worst enemy—Hitlerism—our cultural life is not suspended but, on the contrary, is flourishing, constituting for our enemies a redoubtable symbol of our might and grandeur."

SEVENTH SYMPHONY

(Continued from page two)

For the world's beauty men shed their blood. Beauty is not a toy, a solace or a holiday garment—beauty is the recreation and rearrangement of the will of nature by man's hand and genius. The symphony seems to touch airily, breathlessly, the great heritage of man's path and to reanimate it. The symphony's middle movement is a renaissance—beauty reborn out of dust and ashes. It is like the vision of a contemporary Dante. The threat of death to great art, great good, is revoked by the force of austere and lyrical contemplation.

The closing movement wings far into the future. Vistas of a sublime world of lofty passions and ideas open before the listeners who sit leaning against the tall white columns. This is a world worth living for, worth fighting for. The powerful human theme speaks now. You are caught up into the light, swept into its vortex. With rising agitation you await the finale, the culmination of this stupendous musical experience. You are swept away by the violins to an atmosphere as rare as that of the mountain tops, and with the tempest of orchestral harmony you are borne, in a tension indescribable, toward a future of a higher order.

It was not granted to Hitler to take Leningrad and Moscow. The accursed rat-catcher and his rats are weltering in blood. It was not granted to him to turn the Russian people back to the gnawed bones of the caveman state. The Red Army is writing its own awe-inspiring symphony of victory.

Shostakovich laid his ear to his country's heart and played its triumphal song.

These were the thoughts and feelings that mastered us as we listened to the rehearsal of the Seventh Symphony in the Bolshoi Theater in Kuibyshev.

Material in this Bulletin may be quoted or reproduced

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 1 - 1942

PERATING DEFICIT
SAID TO BE SMALL AT MUSIC CENTER

iends of Conductor Say howing Satisfactory in iew of Transportation ifficulties

ial Dispatch to The Republican rkshire Hills, Aug. 31—According n unofficial report in circulation tockbridge today, Dr Serge Kouszky had a deficit of be[illegible] $6000 from his operation of the shire Music center at Tangle-in July and August.

iends of the conductor of the on Symphony orchestra considthis an excellent showing in view andicaps, which included gasoline tire rationing and opposition of on Symphony orchestra trustees,
however, gave the use of Tanood to the Koussevitzky Music dation under which name it was ated this summer. Friends of the uctor said he expects to have school next year if the orchestra tees again will give him the use Tanglewood.

Berkshire friends of Bishop William Appleton Lawrence who were invited to meet him yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs Rodney Procter at Orleton farm, Stockbridge, were Rev Edmund Randolph Laine, Mr and Mrs Maurice Saunders, Miss Hope Procter, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Mr and Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Frederick J. Bradlee, Jr., of Beacon street, Boston, and her father, Carl A. de Gersdorff, with whom she is staying at Orchard Hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs William H. Vanderbilt and Miss Emily Vanderbilt of Oakland farm, Newport, are at Cricket Creek farm, South Williamstown.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway had a luncheon party yesterday at Tamarack, Tyringham, in compliment to Mrs Samuel Reber and her guest, Mrs Harry S. New of Washington, widow of the one-time postmaster-general and United States senator from Illinois.

Mrs George Allen Holloway of New York city had a luncheon party today at the South street home, Pittsfield, for her mother, Mrs Brace W. Paddock. Mrs Philip Weston and Mrs Paddock are visiting Mrs Frederick Goodrich Crane at Falmouth.

Mrs Perry Tiffany of New York is with Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont.

Spending the week at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, for the golf tournament were Mr and Mrs Gordon W. Gordon, H. E. Dickeman, F. R. Holmes, Jr., Guy H. Donahue of Springfield; Mr and Mrs H. L. Carlisle, Dr and Mrs H. L. Roberts, Philip W. Simons, Lawrence Davis of Longmeadow.

At Berkshire inn, Great Barrington, are Lieut and Mrs William Curley, Westover field; Col Robert Baker, Greenwich, Ct.; Dr and Mrs Arthur MacGregor and daughter, Paterson, N. J.

Mrs R. Jay Flick had a luncheon party today at Uplands, Lenox.

Miss Mary Putnam Hayden is the guest of Miss Mabel Choate at Naumkeag, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From ETUDE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SEP - - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, opened its third season on July 5 with an announced registration of two hundred and fifty-three from all parts of the country. The advance registration for the orchestra numbered ninety-five. Among the events during August, the outstanding one was on August 14, when the first concert performance in America of the "Seventh Symphony" of Shostakovich was presented by the student orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Recapitulation of the 14th Season of Esplanade Concerts

There are a number of remarkable things about the Esplanade Concerts whose 14th season Arthur Fiedler brought to a close on Tuesday evening last at the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell.

Not the least of these is the realization of an ideal which thinking men and friends of good music have long held. It is that the hope and the future of good music lies in its democratization. The wealthy patron no longer exists as such. And only a relatively small number of people can attend most concerts, for they are limited by price and the capacity of auditoriums. Still their number is not large enough to adequately support music. If music, as we know it, is to survive, the base of its support must be broadened. The music itself must be made available to great masses of people.

A little publicized fact about Boston's Esplanade Concerts is that they enjoy a greater attendance than any other free concerts in the United States. The ideal really approaches realization when 30,000 people can attend an Esplanade Concert, as they did on Sunday, Aug. 2, designated Coast Guard Night.

That the great public appreciates these concerts is proven in the healthier support given the Esplanade Concerts Fund this season. According to Mr. George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from which come the 75 men who play in the Hatch Memorial Shell under Mr. Fiedler, all contributions to the fund have increased this year. Mail contributions alone have been 50 percent greater than last year. The remaining deficit is not as outstanding as it has been in past seasons, being now about $3000. But Mr. Judd has expressed confidence that the public will continue contributions to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, Boston, until the deficit has been canceled.

Summarizing the Season

In every respect but one the 1942 season of the Esplanade Concerts reached a new peak of success. And that was something over which no one had control. Mr Fiedler's proverbial luck with the weather did not hold out. Although the number of evening concerts had been extended by five, three could not start because of rain, and two were abandoned halfway through. There were four Wednesday morning children's concerts. At the second concert (July 29) the children voted for a request program, which was played Aug. 5. There were 10,000 present, the largest number ever to attend these children's concerts in the five years of their existence.

Arthur Fiedler conducted 20 of the 30 scheduled concerts. Paul Cherkassky, a member of the violin section of the orchestra, conducted three (one had to be abandoned halfway through). G. Wallace Woodworth of the faculty of Harvard Music School, conducted one; Joseph Wagner, composer-conductor and Assistant Director of Music in the Boston Public Schools, gave one concert; Wheeler Beckett, composer and conductor of the Youth Symphony Concerts, gave two.

No air of condescension is intended in remarking that the Eplanade Concerts programs nave steadily improved in musical quality and interest. There were four concerti scheduled and two programs which included choral music for the first time in the history of these concerts. The informal musical talks given in collaboration with the Division of University Extension of the Massachusetts Department of Education were continued this season. There were also special events: War Bond Night; an All-Russian program; !Coast Guard Night; U. S. O. Night. The latter was intended to stimulate gifts of instruments for service men. And although the concert was canceled because of rain, a collection of instruments came in, nevertheless.—J. W. R.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
SEP 2 - 1942

New York Critic Describes Berkshire Music Center

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Connection With Project Traced By Olin Downs

By Staff Correspondent

Providence, R. I., Sept. 1—Olin Downs, noted music critic of The New York Times, was the guest speaker at the Little Red House luncheon held in the Providence Biltmore Hotel ballroom today, in connection with the fall meeting of the National Board of Directors, the State and District Presidents' Council and national chairmen of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Mr. Downs spoke in place of Dr. Sedge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony, who was unable to be present but in whose honor the luncheon was arranged.

Being closely connected with the Berkshire Music Center as a member of the faculty, Mr. Downs gave in simple style the dramatic story of Koussevitzky's connection with the center and the school for young people which he financed almost entirely the past Summer, when war conditions caused the cancellation of the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Downs' story concerned the belief of one man in the musical ability of the young people at the school and his faith that there is nothing more important than this thing he has started. High tribute was paid the conductor not only by Mr. Downs but by Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., president of the National Federation who presided at the luncheon.

Proof of the interest of the Federation in the Berkshire Music Center was the presentation of Joseph Pepper of New Jersey, violinist who was one of the federation scholarship winners at the school this Summer. Mr. Pepper, still in his early teens, played three numbers, showing considerable artistery in his playing.

The Little Red House project was introduced by Mrs. Gennett, who explained that it is the intention of the Federation to rebuilt the Little Red House at Tanglewood at the Berkshire Music Center, which had been occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne, but had burned in 1890. The house when rebuilt on the foundations which still remain, will be used as studios for the school with one room reserved for Hawthorne mementoes.

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, chairman of the Finance Committee, who was introduced by Mrs. Gannett, told of the plans for financing the project, through the contribution of $1 from every club in the federation and by private subscription. Miss Ettelka Evans of Cincinnati, O., presented Mrs. Gannett with a piece of charred beam from the original house which she picked up as a very small girl and which had reposed in a New England attic since then. Mrs. Gannett in her acceptance announced that it would find a place in the room to be dedicated to Hawthorne.

An authority on the life of Hawthorne, and the author of several books on his life, Dr. Randall Stewart of Brown University, was introduced by Mrs. Gannett. Dr. Stewart confined his talk to the period of 1850 and 51, during which Hawthorne lived in the Little Red House, and read from letters and diaries written by Hawthorne and his wife which described life at Stockbridge, and Hawthorne's literary associates of the period. He spoke briefly of the years Hawthorne spent at Raymond, Me., and as a student at Bowdoin College, as well as of his years at Salem, West Roxbury, Boston and Rome.

This evening's concert at Music Monsion, the home of Mrs. George Hail, was featured by a concert by Hugh McColl, winner of a composition contest sponsored by the Federation. The speaker was Gregg Paine, general manager of Ascap, New York.

This afternoon's walking tour of Old Providence concluded with a tea at the John Brown Mansion, served by the Chopin Club of Providence. This evening's social program was the Past Presidents' Assembly frolic in the hotel ballroom.

The business sessions will be concluded Wednesday when the Board of Directors will act upon recommendations of the National Officers Executive Committee, Past Presidents' Assembly, State and District Presidents' Council and Department, devision and committee chairmen.

This Clipping From CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
SEP 4 - 1942

Federation to Rebuild Hawthorne Home

'Little Red House' in Berkshires to Rise Again As Music Center

Names of nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre, were made public today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of Chamber Music, are a few of the many nationally and internationaly famous men and women on the list.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered at Providence, R. I., by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee colaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the Summer at the Berkshire Music Centre and played in the Student Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

This Clipping From MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR
SEP 5 - 1942

"We must bring the gladness of music to all soldiers in their camps, forts and battle areas."
—Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
SEP 2 - 1942

. Giuseppe and Miriam Gentile report having a busy time at the Berkshire Music Center and hav[redacted] with the Goldovskys . . . Miriam, by the way, sang at a Lakeside concert the past week in which other Clevelanders, George Poinar, Richard Motylinski, Stanley Harris, Robert Swenson and Donald Harris took part . .

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
SEP 2 - 1942

That Shostakovitch 7th Nettles Even Ascap

Providence, Sept. 2 (AP) — American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized today by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Socy. of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the spectacle of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the 'American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," he added.

ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL
9/4/42

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has continued his Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., throughout the summer. Olin Downes, writing in the New York Times states: "It was not with a rhetorical purpose that a soldier recently wrote Dr. Koussevitzky at Stockbridge that he was coming from far away, in an interval of duty, to hear his performances, because he needed them, and because those performances represented what he was fighting for. And it may here be pointed out that Russia at the moment the most tragically involved of all the nations still capable of combatting Hitlerism, cultivates music and by every possible means encourages not only its performance but its composition. This fostering of the art extends all the way from the dissemination of the superb marching songs of the Red Army to the vast proportions of the seventh symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich . . ."

Incidentally Koussevitzky presented the first American concert performance of Shostokovich's Seventh Symphony with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, August 14, with the assistance of Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spaulding in a gala benefit concert for the Russian War Relief. The symphony was introduced to the Chicago area by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Frederick Stock's direction, at Ravinia, Ill., August 22.

* * *

Recapitulation of the 14th Season of Esplanade Concerts

There are a number of remarkable things about the Esplanade Concerts whose 14th season Arthur Fiedler brought to a close on Tuesday evening last at the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell.

Not the least of these is the realization of an ideal which thinking men and friends of good music have long held. It is that the hope and the future of good music lies in its democratization. The wealthy patron no longer exists as such. And only a relatively small number of people can attend most concerts, for they are limited by price and the capacity of auditoriums. Still their number is not large enough to adequately support music. If music, as we know it, is to survive, the base of its support must be broadened. The music itself must be made available to great masses of people.

A little publicized fact about Boston's Esplanade Concerts is that they enjoy a greater attendance than any other free concerts in the United States. The ideal really approaches realization when 30,000 people can attend an Esplanade Concert, as they did on Sunday, Aug. 2, designated Coast Guard Night.

That the great public appreciates these concerts is proven in the healthier support given the Esplanade Concerts Fund this season. According to Mr. George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from which come the 75 men who play in the Hatch Memorial Shell under Mr. Fiedler, all contributions to the fund have increased this year. Mail contributions alone have been 50 percent greater than last year. The remaining deficit is not as outstanding as it has been in past seasons, being now about $3000. But Mr. Judd has expressed confidence that the public will continue contributions to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, Boston, until the deficit has been canceled.

Summarizing the Season

In every respect but one the 1942 season of the Esplanade Concerts reached a new peak of success. And that was something over which no one had control. Mr. Fiedler's proverbial luck with the weather did not hold out. Although the number of evening concerts had been extended by five, three could not start because of rain, and two were abandoned halfway through. There were four Wednesday morning children's concerts. At the second concert (July 29) the children voted for a request program, which was played Aug. 5. There were 10,000 present, the largest number ever to attend these children's concerts in the five years of their existence.

Arthur Fiedler conducted 20 of the 20 scheduled concerts. Paul Cherkassky, a member of the violin section of the orchestra, conducted three (one had to be abandoned halfway through). G. Wallace Woodworth of the faculty of Harvard Music School, conducted one; Joseph Wagner, composer-conductor and Assistant Director of Music in the Boston Public Schools, gave one concert; Wheeler Beckett, composer and conductor of the Youth Symphony Concerts, gave two.

No air of condescension is intended in remarking that the Esplanade Concerts programs have steadily improved in musical quality and interest. There were four concerti scheduled and two programs which included choral music for the first time in the history of these concerts. The informal musical talks given in collaboration with the Division of University Extension of the Massachusetts Department of Education were continued this season. There were also special events: War Bond Night; an All-Russian program; Coast Guard Night; U. S. O. Night. The latter was intended to stimulate gifts of instruments for service men. And although the concert was canceled because of rain, a collection of instruments came in, nevertheless.—J. W. R.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR
SEP 5 - 1942

"We must bring the gladness of music to all soldiers in their camps, forts and battle areas."
—Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
SEP 2 - 1942

Giuseppe and Miriam Gentile report having a busy time at the Berkshire Music Center and [redacted] with the Goldovskys . . . Miriam, by the way, sang at a Lakeside concert the past week in which other Clevelanders, George Poinar, Richard Motylinski, Stanley Harris, Robert Swenson and Donald Harris took part . . .

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
SEP 2 - 1942

That Shostakovitch 7th Nettles Even Ascap

Providence, Sept. 2 (AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized today by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Socy. of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

He said the spectacle of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitsky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini, Stokowski or Koussevitsky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," he added.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
SEP 2 - 1942

New York Critic Describes Berkshire Music Center

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Connection With Project Traced By Olin Downs

By Staff Correspondent

Providence, R. I., Sept. 1—Olin Downs, noted music critic of The New York Times, was the guest speaker at the Little Red House luncheon held in the Providence Biltmore Hotel ballroom today, in connection with the fall meeting of the National Board of Directors, the State and District Presidents' Council and national chairmen of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Mr. Downs spoke in place of Dr. Sedge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony, who was unable to be present but in whose honor the luncheon was arranged.

Being closely connected with the Berkshire Music Center as a member of the faculty, Mr. Downs gave in simple style the dramatic story of Koussevitzky's connection with the center and the school for young people which he financed almost entirely the past Summer, when war conditions caused the cancellation of the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Downs' story concerned the belief of one man in the musical ability of the young people at the school and his faith that there is nothing more important than this thing he has started. High tribute was paid the conductor not only by Mr. Downs but by Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., president of the National Federation who presided at the luncheon.

Proof of the interest of the Federation in the Berkshire Music Center was the presentation of Joseph Pepper of New Jersey, violinist who was one of the federation scholarship winners at the school this Summer. Mr. Pepper, still in his early teens, played three numbers, showing considerable artistery in his playing.

The Little Red House project was introduced by Mrs. Gannett, who explained that it is the intention of the Federation to rebuilt the Little Red House at Tanglewood at the Berkshire Music Center, which had been occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne, but had burned in 1890. The house when rebuilt on the foundations which still remain, will be used as studios for the school with one room reserved for Hawthorne mementoes.

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, chairman of the Finance Committee, who was introduced by Mrs. Gannett, told of the plans for financing the project, through the contribution of $1 from every club in the federation and by private subscription. Miss Ethelka Evans of Cincinnati, O., presented Mrs. Gannett with a piece of charred beam from the original house which she picked up as a very small girl and which had reposed in a New England attic since then. Mrs. Gannett in her acceptance announced that it would find a place in the room to be dedicated to Hawthorne.

An authority on the life of Hawthorne, and the author of several books on his life, Dr. Randall Stewart of Brown University, was introduced by Mrs. Gannett. Dr. Stewart confined his talk to the period of 1850 and 51, during which Hawthorne lived in the Little Red House, and read from letters and diaries written by Hawthorne and his wife which described life at Stockbridge, and Hawthorne's literary associates of the period. He spoke briefly of the years Hawthorne spent at Raymond, Me., and as a student at Bowdoin College, as well as of his years at Salem, West Roxbury, Boston and Rome.

This evening's concert at Music Mansion, the home of Mrs. George Hall, was featured by a concert by Hugh McColl, winner of a composition contest sponsored by the Federation. The speaker was Gregg Paine, general manager of Ascap, New York.

This afternoon's walking tour of Old Providence concluded with a tea at the John Brown Mansion, served by the Chopin Club of Providence. This evening's social program was the Past Presidents' Assembly frolic in the hotel ballroom.

The business sessions will be concluded Wednesday when the Board of Directors will act upon recommendations of the National Officers Executive Committee, Past Presidents' Assembly, State and District Presidents' Council and Department, devision and committee chairmen.

This Clipping From CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
SEP 4 - 1942

Federation to Rebuild Hawthorne Home

'Little Red House' in Berkshires to Rise Again As Music Center

Names of nationally prominent sponsors for the "Little Red House" project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood in the Berkshires as a Summer studio for the Berkshire Music Centre, were made public today by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute of Music, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, outstanding patron of Chamber Music, are a few of the many nationally and internationaly famous men and women on the list.

The sponsors of the "Little Red House" project were announced to the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs, in conjunction with a luncheon tendered at Providence, R. I., by the Federation to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Centre, who is chairman of the Boston Symphony Committee colaborating with the "Little Red House" project. Professor Randall Stewart, an authority on the life of Hawthorne, spoke of the novelist's life at Tanglewood and of his literary associations there.

Joseph Pepper, one of three scholarship students in strings who has been spending the Summer at the Berkshire Music Centre and played in the Student Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton furnished the musical program.

Mrs. Gannett said that as soon as building materials become available the Hawthorne house, which was razed by fire in the 1890's, will be rebuilt on its original foundations and in replica of the original structure. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Boston architect, a member of the firm which was in large measure responsible for the restoration of Williamsburg, will be the architect supervising construction. He was prompted to offer his services for the project because the Tanglewood property originally belonged to Mrs. Hepburn's family and was given by them to the Berkshire Music Centre.

The majority of the 48 states were represented on the sponsor list for the project as made public by Mrs. Gannett.

ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
9/5/42

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has continued his Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., throughout the summer. Olin Downes, writing in the New York Times states: "It was not with a rhetorical purpose that a soldier recently wrote Dr. Koussevitzky at Stockbridge that he was coming from far away, in an interval of duty, to hear his performances, because he needed them, and because those performances represented what he was fighting for. And it may here be pointed out that Russia at the moment the most tragically involved of all the nations still capable of combatting Hitlerism, cultivates music and by every possible means encourages not only its performance but its composition. This fostering of the art extends all the way from the dissemination of the superb marching songs of the Red Army to the vast proportions of the seventh symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich . . ."

Incidentally Koussevitzky presented the first American concert performance of Shostokovich's Seventh Symphony with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, August 14, with the assistance of Dorothy Maynor, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spaulding in a gala benefit concert for the Russian War Relief. The symphony was introduced to the Chicago area by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under Frederick Stock's direction, at Ravinia, Ill., August 22.

* * *

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
SEP 7 - 1942

MUSIC

By Carl E. Lindstrom

Providence, R. I.—(AP)—American music critics and conductors who "bow and scrape" to European musicians were criticized last night by John Gregg Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

THE unhappy creatures whom fate designed to be music critics are so vulnerable that there shouldn't be any need of probing, after the fashion of Rommel in Egypt, to find a soft spot before launching an attack. Critics are quite soft and quite defenseless on all fronts.

Only an inexperienced attacker like Mr. Paine would make the mistake of cutting loose in about the only quarter where the general run of critics are pretty well armored—that is, in the year-in year-out championship of American composers. Even the critic who is not too sure of his perception and acumen knows that it is good insurance to whoop it up for the native product. They are sincere about it too. Bach, Schubert, Palestrini will take care of themselves; Josten, Sowerby, Barber need help. To encourage Beethoven is to be a fool; to discourage Copland (if that were possible) is to be another.

Through the years any writer with a self-protective instinct builds up the sort of defense which enables him to reach into his clippings and produce such a paragraph as this concerning Shostakovich's Quintet:

"There are half a dozen American composers who can write with as much skill and greater intensity of inspiration but who have not had the benefit of Shostakovich's publicity."

There has been a good deal of bowing and scraping but most of it on the part of the great ticket-buying public. People will pay good money to hear Tschaikowsky but are considerably less willing when it comes to anything by William Schuman. Carmen was a great success at Bushnell (all four performances); Gruenberg's "Emperor Jones" was not. Next season's operas will probably not include one by Deems Taylor, Gian-Carlo Menotti, Hanson or Hageman.

Maybe the public is right. Who knows?

Paine said the episode of three of America's greatest conductors, Koussevitzky, Toscanini and Stokowski, "Fighting to conduct the American premiere of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony" was an example.

STOKOWSKI was never in the running, so far as this column ever heard, but Arthur Rodzinski did have hopes. It is an understandable impulse on the part of any conductor to seek to garner so great an audience as the Shostakovich build-up was bound to produce.

No doubt a great many people who had never taken the trouble to listen to a symphony before heard this one. Some of these may be content not to hear another but it is equally possible that as many others might try again. The music makers' first problem is to get attention. One can't very well blame them for seizing the chance of a life-time.

"Had Roy Harris, an American composer, written the symphony and taken it to Toscanini or Koussevitzky, they wouldn't have performed it," Paine told a convention session of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Toscanini's aversion to American music is such an old story as not to be news in anybody's convention but he doesn't like Tschaikowsky either and he has been indulged in the human right to his own tastes. Stokowski performs a good deal of American music. His predilection is for sensational novelties no matter where they come from.

Koussevitzky, on the other hand, is in a unique position with regard to home-grown music. It is a toss-up whether he or Frederick Stock of Chicago is to be credited with first place for honoring prophets in their own country.

It was too bad that Mr. Paine had to pick just the name of Harris in this connection for herein again he proved himself an inexperienced attacker. It is indeed Dr. Koussevitzky and no other that Harris has to thank for a good many of his premieres.

Last winter it was the Third Symphony. If the Librarian will be good enough to bring us the picture of Mr. and Mrs. Harris and Dr. Koussevitzky taken on the occasion of the premiere of Harris's Third Symphony—yes, that's the one, thank you.

See, here 'tis:

"The whole middle passage of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony was lifted almost bodily from Strauss, but none of the critics mentioned it," Paine added.

YES, they did. Nicholas Nabokov writing in The New Republic dated Aug. 3 said:

"Is it necessary to employ an eclectic style combining all kinds of cliches like those found in such 'popular' pieces as Tschaikowsky's Overture of 1812, the Heldenleben of Richard Strauss, and the Bolero of Ravel?'

And Olin Downes too discovered "some of Richard Strauss's battle scene in Heldenleben." He also discovered a bit of Respighi and Mr. Nabokov heard strains of Mahler. Your own reporter found that "a quieter episode hints at Cesar Franck . . . " and "allusions to Sibelius, Ravel and Rimsky-Korsakoff."

But there is no use bringing all that up now. Examination of a few other reviews reveals that derivations were found from practically every composer except Ethelbert Nevin and Buxtehude.

* * *

In Mr. Paine's talk, for the first time, critics and conductors are lumped into the same category and that, of course, is flattering. However, the business of defending music criticism brings to mind the episode of the treasurable, un-financial soul who never did solve the mysteries of banking and whose check writing habits were more optimistic than arithmetical.

One particular victim of these checks (it was before the day of rubber rationing) finally caught up with our ingenuous artist, cholerically shook the offending paper in the miscreant's face and shouted: "Your check is no good!"

To which the guileless one replied:

"Well, I never said it was any good, did I?"

And that's often the way I feel about all music criticism.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
SEP 7 - 1942

'Little Red House' Sponsors Announced

Mrs. Guy Gannett, president of Clubs, has announced the list of the National Federation of Music prominent sponsors of the "Little Red House" project of the Federation. The project involves rebuilding the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood as a summer studio for the Berkshire Music Center.

Among the sponsors are Senator Arthur Vandenberg; Dr. Walter Damrosch; Mrs. Mary Curtis Bok, president of the Curtis Institute; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge; Charles Wakefield Cadman; Frank LaForge; Rudolph Ganz; Dr. Edgar Stillman Kelley; Grace Moore; Mrs. Lytle Hull, president of the New Opera Company, and Mrs. Carle Jackson, formerly Rosa Ponselle.

WEISER TO PLAY NEW WORK HERE

LOWELL Sun 9-10 JUTD

Tunesmith's Transcriptions of Tschaikowsky's Tingling Tones Take Terror From Concerto

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

LOWELL—Now that the big name bands have adopted and adapted the tingling tunes of Tschaikowsky nobody is afraid of a piano concerto.

That is what makes it interesting to learn that the young American pianist, Bernhard Weiser, will play one with the 80 men of the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's direction in the concert for Russian war relief in the Memorial Auditorium next Sunday afternoon.

And they do say that this particular concerto composed by Aran Khatchourian, a young Soviet-Armenian musician, has more than a touch of ragtime in it.

At any rate when it was played for its first professional performance in America recently at a Boston Pops concert, with Mr. Weiser as soloist, it was received with enthusiastic acclaim by an audience which goes to the Pops to be entertained.

The composer is about the same age as Shostakovitch, his compatriot, who is now very much in the limelight by reason of first performances in this country of his Seventh Symphony.

Khatchourian hails from the Caucasian region where the Russians are now desperately battling the Nazis. And he derives his nationalistic music from there. That makes the Concerto especially timely.

Bernhard Weiser

American born Bernhard Weiser began the study of music at the age of eight. He won a scholarship in the Institute of Musical Art of the Juillard School of Music in New York. Then he had a period of intensive study abroad. Returning to America, he was awarded a fellowship in the Juillard graduate school, where he remained for four years in the class of the celebrated Carl Friedburg. In 1938 he went to Europe again and made a successful concert tour of the Scandinavian countries. Back in New York he was given the honor of a recital by the Madrigal society and played the Beethoven Emperor concerto with the Colorado Springs symphony and the Boston Pops orchestra. His New York debut was in the Town Hall last October when the critics acclaimed him as an artist of great talent. In Boston he made a fine impression last season in a recital in Jordan hall.

At the concert next Sunday, therefore, we are to get a sample of the talents of a young pianist and a young composer who is evidently on the road to still wider musical fame.

And to further the success of the coming concert, here is a reminder that there will be a meeting of the general committee at the Lowell Commercial college, 226 Central street, at 7.45 tonight.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER
SEP 13 1942

New Russian Symphonies on Boston Symphony Schedule

A SYMPHONY by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 9.

Serge Koussevitzky, then beginning his 19th season as the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening program, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven. The First Symphony of Shostakovitch, by which this composer became popular in this country and which Koussevitzky has not yet conducted, will also figure in the season's concerts.

Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances: one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America; and the other by Nicolai Berezowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and the recent work of Aaron Copland, "A Lincoln Portrait."

Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past. The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall—24 pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons. Subscriptions are now being taken for each of the four series.

Miller at RKO Boston
Glenn Miller, in his farewell engagement before entering the army, will play at RKO Boston theatre for a week starting Friday.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
SEP 13 1942

Khrennikov Work on List of New Music for Boston Symphony

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 9. Serge Koussevitzky, who will begin his 19th season as conductor of the orchestra, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening program, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven.

The First Symphony of Shostakovitch by which this composer became popular in this country and which Koussevitzky has not yet conducted, will also figure in the season's concerts. Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances: one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America; and the other by Nicolai Berezowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and the recent work of Aaron Copland, "A Lincoln Portrait." Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past.

The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall—24 pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons. Subscriptions are now being taken for each of the four series.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
SEP 15 1942

Mrs. Dreyfus Taken by Death

Leader in Clubs Was Musician, Scluptor

Mrs. Sylvia Goulston Dreyfus, prominent clubwoman and wife of Carl Dreyfus, member of the board of trustees of the Boston City Hospital for 25 years died last night at the Beth Israel Hospital after an illness of six months.

She was a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a member of the advisory board of the Berkshire Festival, honorary chairman of the Boston Committe of the Palestine Orchestra Fund, Inc., formerly chairman of the Brittany Coffee Shop, and formerly president of the Hecht Neighborhood House.

She published many articles on music, among them interviews with musicians, for national periodicals, includin gher "Conversation with Koussevitzky" which made its appearance in "Modern American Vistas," and a collection of essays for freshman English studies.

She was a talented sculptor and had modelled the heads of Serge Koussevitzky, a family friend of long standing, and many others.

Born in Boston, the former Sylvia Goulston, she was a graduate of Wellesley College. Her home was at 312 Dartmouth street.

Besides her husband, she leaves three children, Carl Dreyfus, Jr., Lt. Edward G. Dreyfus, U. S. A., stationed at Ft. Munroe, Va., and Mrs. Charles F. Haas of Dayton, Ohio; a grandson, David Haas; and her mother, Mrs. Edward Goulston of Commonwealth avenue.

Funeral services will be announced later.

MRS. CARL DREYFUS

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
SEP 15 1942

Perfect costume for the traditional Friday concerts is Ellen Moseley's slim black corduroy suit.

Saturday night concerts are week-end favorites too and Joan Greiss' fragile black lace and crepe dinner gown is a nice choice for the evening program.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN
SEP 23 1942

NEW BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON WILL OPEN OCT. 9

Tikhon Khrennikov, the young composer of Soviet Russia whose music has attracted general attention, will be first heard in Boston when his symphony is performed by Serge Koussevitzky in the coming season of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The season will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9.

Khrennikov, born in 1913, is known by a Piano Concerto, by his opera, "Loneliness," and his Symphony, which has been heard in this country. He is now composing a Second Symphony.

The season's program will consist of the Second Symphony of Beethoven in D major.

The sale of subscription tickets is now open at Symphony Hall for each of the four series. There will be 24 Friday afternoon, 24 Saturday evening, six Monday evening, six Tuesday afternoon concerts.

Few concerts are missed by the Sears family. Mrs. Benjamin Gardiner (Elizabeth Sears) will be on hand as usual for the first program.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
SEP 18 1942

New Music Is Announced For Boston Symphony Season

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, October 9. Serge Koussevitzky, then beginning his nineteenth season as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening programme, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven. The First Symphony of Shostakovitch, by which its composer became popular in this country and which Koussevitzky has not yet conducted, will also figure in the season's concerts. Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances—one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America and the other by Nicolai Berezowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and the recent work of Aaron Copeland, "A Lincoln Portrait." Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past. The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall—twenty-four pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evening, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
SEP 19 1942

Chatterbox

Boaz Piller, basoonist of the Boston Symphony for twenty-seven seasons, was in town Friday. . . . His ghost was Dean Paul van Katwijk of Southernd Methodist University school of music, who was a classmate of Piller's at the Hague Conservatory. . . . Piller, like Mr. Van, is Dutch. . . .

Society and Symphony

The stirring strains of the national anthem will bring an audience of thousands to their feet on that much anticipated Friday afternoon in October which marks the opening of another season of Boston Symphony concerts under the conducting genius of Serge Koussevitsky.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
SEP 15 1942

Mrs. Dreyfus Taken by Death

Leader in Clubs Was Musician, Scluptor

Mrs. Sylvia Goulston Dreyfus, prominent clubwoman and wife of Carl Dreyfus, member of the board of trustees of the Boston City Hospital for 25 years died last night at the Beth Israel Hospital after an illness of six months.

She was a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music, a member of the advisory board of the Berkshire Festival, honorary chairman of the Boston Committe of the Palestine Orchestra Fund, Inc., formerly chairman of the Brittany Coffee Shop, and formerly president of the Hecht Neighborhood House.

She published many articles on music, among them interviews with musicians, for national periodicals, includin gher "Conversation with Koussevitzky" which made its appearance in "Modern American Vistas," and a collection of essays for freshman English studies.

She was a talented sculptor and had modelled the heads of Serge Koussevitzky, a family friend of long standing, and many others.

Born in Boston, the former Sylvia Goulston, she was a graduate of Wellesley College. Her home was at 312 Dartmouth street.

Besides her husband, she leaves three children, Carl Dreyfus, Jr., Lt. Edward G. Dreyfus, U. S. A., stationed at Ft. Munroe, Va., and Mrs. Charles F. Haas of Dayton, Ohio; a grandson, David Haas; and her mother, Mrs. Edward Goulston of Commonwealth avenue.

Funeral services will be announced later.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
SEP 18 1942

New Music Is Announced For Boston Symphony Season

A symphony by Tikhon Khrennikov, the eminent young composer of Soviet Russia, will have its first western performance at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season which is to open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, October 9. Serge Koussevitzky, then beginning his nineteenth season as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the new Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch for the opening programme, in which he is also going to include the Second Symphony of Beethoven. The First Symphony of Shostakovitch, by which its composer became popular in this country and which Koussevitzky has not yet conducted, will also figure in the season's concerts. Two symphonies written for the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have their first performances—one by Bohuslav Martinu, the Czech composer now living in America and the other by Nicolai Berezowsky. A new symphony by Roy Harris will be performed, and the recent work of Aaron Copeland, "A Lincoln Portrait." Further new works are promised, together with the always predominant symphonic masterpieces of the past. The orchestra will give the usual four series of concerts at Symphony Hall—twenty-four pairs on Friday afternoons and Saturday evening, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
SEP 19 1942

Chatterbox

Boaz Piller, basoonist of the Boston Symphony for twenty-seven seasons, was in town Friday. . . . His ghost was Dean Paul van Katwijk of Southernd Methodist University school of music, who was a classmate of Piller's at the Hague Conservatory. . . . Piller, like Mr. Van, is Dutch. . . .

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
SEP 15 1942

MRS. CARL DREYFUS

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN
SEP 23 1942

NEW BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON WILL OPEN OCT. 9

Tikhon Khrennikov, the young composer of Soviet Russia whose music has attracted general attention, will be first heard in Boston when his symphony is performed by Serge Koussevitzky in the coming season of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The season will open in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9.

Khrennikov, born in 1913, is known by a Piano Concerto, by his opera, "Loneliness," and his Symphony, which has been heard in this country. He is now composing a Second Symphony.

The season's program will consist of the Second Symphony of Beethoven in D major.

The sale of subscription tickets is now open at Symphony Hall for each of the four series. There will be 24 Friday afternoon, 24 Saturday evening, six Monday evening, six Tuesday afternoon concerts.

Perfect costume for the traditional Friday concerts is Ellen Moseley's slim black corduroy suit.

Saturday night concerts are week-end favorites too and Joan Greiss' fragile black lace and crepe dinner gown is a nice choice for the evening program.

Few concerts are missed by the Sears family. Mrs. Benjamin Gardiner (Elizabeth Sears) will be on hand as usual for the first program.

Society

The stirring strains of the national anthem will bring an audience of thousands to their feet on that much anticipated Friday afternoon in October which marks the opening of another season of Boston Symphony concerts under the conducting genius of Serge Koussevitsky.

By MARJORIE WATTS

One of the luckiest audiences left in the world will gather quietly by subway, bus and train a week from Friday to open the 62d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The sad echoes of a world at war have reached the familiar marble corridors of the handsome hall on Huntington av. before, but never perhaps have the uniforms in an audience stood for so grim a reminder that great music and the freedom to hear it have all but perished from the scorched earth of Europe.

Reminder, too, will be the orchestra's distinguished and well-loved conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, whose valiant people are so gallantly fighting the length and breadth of their land.

Engrossed in the war effort as she is, Boston, staunch patron of the fine arts so integral a part of the civilization the Allied world is fighting to preserve, will not fail to take her seat on Friday—and usually in the same row where her mother sat a quarter of a century ago, for symphony seats have been a heritage along with the family silver and pearls since. Cabots and Coolidges first subscribed to the orchestra founded by Henry Lee Higginson in 1881.

And many of the names which will fill the society pages after next week's opening concert will be the same as those listed in October of 1900 when the orchestra played its first concert in Symphony Hall, after nearly two decades in Boston's historic and beloved Music Hall. Endicotts and Shaws and Saltonstalls, many with seat numbers dating back to the old Music Hall days, Lowells and Gardners, Paines and Putnams, Hallowells and Hemenways, Lothrops, Lees, and Whitneys, are still in the neat black books kept so faithfully by Emma Kelliher in her small shining office in Symphony Hall. Her industry and records have replaced the picturesque September auctions that used to bring such fabulous prices for preferred locations (Mrs. Jack Gardner paid more than $1000 for one pair of $12 season tickets at one of these spirited "advance sales" famous for their feuds).

Seat-holders are now good neighbors, many of them for more than a decade of Friday afternoons spent with the stirring symphonies of the composers whose likenesses in marble line either side of the long hall. Mrs. Francis W. Hallowell and Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot are still neighbors in Row O, and in M, Mrs. Francis P. Sears and Mrs. Frederick Ayer, North Shore neighbors in Hamilton, will once again share seats 12, 13, 14 and 15. Mrs. Moses Williams, Mrs. Eben S. Draper, Mrs. F. Wayland Ayer and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller are also M neighbors of long standing, as are Mrs. Edwin S. Webster and Mrs. Frederic Sprague Goodwin, Mrs. George Lewis Jr., Mrs. Rene Paine and Mrs. John W. Bartol.

As cherished as floor seats are the choice seats of the balconies, and there both the Governor's wife, Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall, and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall have their seats; there, too, Mrs. Nelson A. Lee, Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Allston Burr, Mrs. George Hawley, Mrs. Frederick S. Moseley, Mrs. James B. Ayer, Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, Mrs. Bartow Crocker, Mrs. Edward Brandegee, Mrs. John W. Hallowell, Mrs. Charles G. Mixter, Mrs. Oliver Wolcott, Mrs. Edward P. Motley, Mrs. Sherman Thayer and Mrs. Lucius Thayer, and Mrs. Francis W. Bird, whose daughter, Miss Anna Bird, also has her own seat.

And on the opposite side of the balcony Mrs. Charles S. Bird Jr., Mrs. James Jackson, Mrs. Henry S. Grew, Mrs. Samuel Hoar, Mrs. Frederick Lowell, Mrs. Malcolm Donald, Mrs. Thaddeus De Friez and her daughter, Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray, Mrs. Thomas N. Metcalf, Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, Mrs. Philip Chase, Mrs. Benjamin S. Blake and Miss Elizabeth Blake, Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Mrs. George R. Agassiz, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mrs. George H. Monks, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mrs. Charles Collens and Miss Ellen Bullard.

Although the Christian Herters are in Washington this year, they have kept their Symphony seats, and another busy war worker who will find the precious time for her cherished symphony is Mrs. George Saltonstall West, and still others working extra hours at Red Cross and war relief centers to "pay" on Friday afternoons will be Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, back in her familiar seats in Row E, where Mrs. Philip R. Allen, Mrs. Stephen Paine, and Mrs. William I. Morse will also be as usual.

Mrs. Henry S. Hall and her daughter, Miss Edith Hall, will both be seat-holders this year, and still others of the familiar company will be Lady Herbert Ames, Mrs. Richard D. Fay, Mrs. Stephen Sabine, Mrs. Edward Harding, Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. George U. Crocker, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer, Mrs. Neal Rantoul, Mrs. Augustus Soule, Mrs. James Garfield, Mrs. Charles Almy, Maxim Karolik, Mrs. William H. Coolidge Sr., Mrs. Charles F. Ayer, Miss Elizabeth Leland, Mrs. William Lindsey, and Mrs. Arthur Cabot.

And also Mrs. Russell Grinnell, Mrs.G. Glover Crocker, Mrs. Galen L. Stone, Mrs. Royal Little, Mrs. Edward Jackson Holmes, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Mrs. Louis A. Frothingham, Miss Mary Q. Thorndike, Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Mrs. George H. Swift, Mrs. Pierpont L. Stackpole, Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Arthur Bell, Mrs. Frank C. Paine, Mrs. Carl T. Keller, Mrs. James Dean, Mrs. Roger Wolcott, Mrs. John G. Coolidge, Mrs. William Phillips, Mrs. Charles O. Rimmer, Mrs. Theodore E. Brown, Mrs. William B. Long, Mrs. George E. Warren, Mrs. Stephen B. Ames, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mrs. James G. Storrow, Miss Alice Stackpole, Mrs. Bayard Warren, Mrs. J. Hampden Robb, Mrs. Edward F. MacNichol, Miss Mary Iasigi, Miss Mary Hooper, Mrs. Frederick H. Chase, Mrs. Gilbert King, Mrs. Sewall Cabot, Mrs. Alexander Ladd, Mrs. Paul Gring, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn, Mrs. Thomas S. Blumer, Mrs. F. Douglas Cochrane, Mrs. Pliny Jewell and Mrs. Pliny Jewell Jr., Mrs. Phineas W. Sprague, Mrs. Arthur Jones, Miss Eleanor Jones, Mrs. Guy Lowell, Mrs. George Clapp, Mrs. Benjamin C. Tower, Miss Betsy Tower, Mrs. Malcolmn B. French, Mrs. William H. Coburn, Mrs. Benjamin D. Shreve Mrs. Stephen Paine, Miss Mary Clapp and Mrs. James H. Ropes.

Boston Symphony Season Opens

By L. A. Sloper

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its sixty-second season on the afternoon of Oct. 9 in Symphony Hall, with Dr. Koussevitzky again in charge. The program consisted of the Second Symphony of Beethoven and the Seventh of Shostakovitch. Conductor and orchestra were in splendid form.

The audience was alert, and warmly responsive. It was obviously aware that this fall, more than ever, we are fortunate in seeing the symphony season inaugurated as usual. The United Nations are fighting for their existence, there is a labor problem (apparently on the way to solution), economic pressure is more stringent than ever.

Nevertheless, the Boston Symphony Orchestra carries on, its spirit untouched, its standards unimpaired. It is one of the chief glories of the city, and it has never been needed more than now. So long as the symphony concerts continue, it is possible to feel that things might be a great deal worse.

Friday's audience displayed its pleasure throughout the afternoon. Mr. Burgin was applauded when he entered. Audience and orchestra rose to welcome Dr. Koussevitzky. There was eager applause for the Beethoven symphony, which was played with the virtuosity, malleabiity, and tonal beauty for which the orchestra is famous. The listeners burst into spontaneous clapping after the first movement of the Shostakovitch, and Dr. Koussevitzky sanctioned the breach of custom. They cheered at the end.

A second hearing of the Shostakovitch Seventh, which has stirred so much interest and received so many indorsements from distinguished sources, did not serve to modify the opinion I formed of it last summer in New York. It has the usual virtues and the usual shortcomings of its composer's work. It is brilliant and dull, individual and imitative, terse and repetitious—not all at the same time, but in protracted succession. For all the many influences it reflects, its principal characteristic remains for me its Russian national flavor.

One of the most penetrating comments on it was made by an English critic, who wrote that whatever may be said of its debt to Tchaikovsky, Strauss, Liszt, and who not, its real musical ancestor was Berlioz. A useful remark; for while the piece is Russian in spirit, owes much of its orchestral color to Strauss, and exceeds even Liszt in its bombast, it is closer in its form, or lack of form, to Berlioz than to anybody else one can think of. It is discursive, redundant, and all but shapeless. It is noisy and pretentious, yet who shall say that it is not sincere?

Dr. Koussevitzky of course brought it to brilliant realization in tone and color. He made its national flavor pungent, its emotion fervid. Naturally he could not make clear a structure that is amorphous; nor could be help it if the listener sometimes thought, "Yes, yes; go on."

One thing he could have done, though; he could have started the long crescendo in the first movement with a much dimmer pianissimo; it should be played, at most, pppppp, in order to give full effectiveness to the climax; though, in all conscience, it was climactic enough on this occasion.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN
10/5/42

May Unionize Famed Boston Symphonians

BOSTON, Oct. 5, (UP) — The way may be opened in June for the famed 62-year-old Boston symphony orchestra to become unionized.

President James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) is expected to propose to his organizatoin's convention at that time certain amendments to the union by-laws which would meet with the approval of the orchestra trustees.

The trustees' views on the matter were contained last night in the first public appeal for funds to make up last year's deficit of $38,000 and for $150,000 to carry out the 1942-43 program.

The trustees doubted that their orchestra, only non-union group among the nation's major symphony orchestras, could "maintain its musical integrity" under the union's existing by-laws.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

NEGOTIATE WITH PETRILLO

BOSTON, Oct. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, sole major non-union orchestra in the country, disclosed today it had been negotiating with James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) concerning union recognition, but that certain barriers remained to be overcome before an agreement could be reached.

NEW SYMPHONY OPENS SEASON

"Leningrad" Given Local Premiere

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The opening of the 62d Boston Symphony season, as an occasion in itself, was quite overshadowed yesterday by the local premiere of the most discussed, one might say the best publicized orchestral work of our day, the Seventh or "Leningrad" Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch. When the Symphony had run its appointed course of 70-odd minutes the audience spontaneously broke into applause that, though extremely vociferous, was not long continued; but the hour was already late and the Friday afternoon subscribers are not given to lingering.

Having found that other Shostakovitch symphonies improved upon acquaintance, this reviewer is prepared to admit that the following verdict on this war-born seventh is not his final one. Also it is always risky to expect too much, and there may have been many others yesterday who felt that the piece did not live up to all the claims that have been made for it.

At any rate, the Symphony does not disappoint at the outset. The opening theme is superb and, while the mood changes, the music does not lose its grip. Then comes the celebrated passage, descriptive of the onset of war, that every commentator has likened to Ravel's Bolero. However different the treatment, particularly at the end with its clashing counterpoint, it's almost unbearable volume of sound, this comparison is unavoidable. Both composers have taken a salient theme, Shostakovitch's is much the shorter, and with a persistent, insistent rhythm have built up a long, steady, unrelenting crescendo.

Two other martial moments in symphonic music are brought to mind by this undeniably effective and exciting episode, the fourth movement of Respighi's "Pines of Rome," that somewhat similarly depicts the approach of Caesar's legions and the grimly ominous "August, 1914" section of Schelling's "Impressions from an Artist's Life," that later found its way into "A Victory Ball." The ensuing threnody for solo bassoon over plucked chords in the strings is one passage that might well grow upon you; and the final reminiscense of the battle-picture is a master stroke.

Almost a piece in itself is this first movement. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky not only permitted applause here but bade the players rise in acknowledgement of it. Inevitably the next two divisions, an almost Scherzo and a slow movement, are anti-climatic, and though both, particularly the latter, have their points, they might well be cut in half or omitted altogether. They contribute little or nothing to the Symphony's dramatic scheme and the listener who does not grow restive during them must have a deal of patience.

With the Finale we come nearer to the mood and to the level of the beginning which, in retrospect, seems far and away the most striking portion of the whole. In point of volume the final peroration, which speaks of victory to come, leaves nothing to be desired. But sonority is not everything and yesterday this hearer, at least, did not receive the anticipated thrill.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who played the Symphony twice at his student festival in the Berkshires last summer, has expressed his faith in the Symphony both by word and deed. It is difficult to see how any performance of it could be more eloquent than that of yesterday or could better disclose the varied content of the music. In its very different way the Second Symphony of Beethoven, with which the concert opened, was as sympathetically treated . . . As for the Shostakovitch, there is one thing you must be sure of: they are not playing it in Berlin.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

13

1942

Music, Dra And the A

The event of the week, from his typewriter seat, will be the opening concert on Friday afternoon of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The 62d season's first program is of unusual interest this year since it combines the much-discussed Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony with the Second of Beethoven. This will be the first opportunity to hear the new work of the young Soviet composer conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky with his own seasoned orchestra. At Tanglewood, he had two performances with the much-commended student orchestra of the Koussevitzky Foundation Summer School.

Word comes from the Berkshires, where the famous conductor has been resting at "Seranak" his Summer estate and planning programs for the coming season, concerning an interview by a member of the Symphony Hall staff. As this accustomed admirer watched Koussevitzky reading a score, his look of delight was noted and his pleased "Ahah!" "A new discovery?" "Absolutely." "And who is the new composer?" "Beethoven."

The Old is Ever New

Then the master interpreter went on: "My friend, when I am going to conduct a masterpiece that everybody seems to know only too well, I begin by studying it. And before I open the covers I say to myself: 'Here is a new work by a new composer. Who knows what profound secrets of human emotion may be revealed to me if I examine these pages absolutely without prejudice?' And so, not only with new composers, but old ones, it is possible for me to make discoveries."

Very early Friday we shall be in line, by annual custom, observed even when we held a convenient subscription seat for Saturday night concerts. Twelve noon is usually "safe," but this program will bring the "rush" enthusiasts filling up fast by 10 a. m.

Even Willkie Failed

The New York Times of Wednesday last tells of the invitation, on behalf of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, sent by Toscanini to Dimitri Shostakovitch requesting his appearance, as conductor, for the first two weeks in November, of works by Soviet composers. Shostakovitch replied that he is not a master at conducting. Then he was summoned as pianist. His reply was that he is too busy with his new symphonic work, dedicated to the 25th anniversary of U.S.S.R.

It seems that Wendell Willkie even had intervened with Stalin to induce Shostakovitch, Mr. Willkie being a friend of Mrs. John T. Pratt, a member of the board of the Philharmonic.

The New Opera which is freshening up the New York season, will present under Stokowski the American premiere of Shostakovitch's orchestra arrangement of Mussorgsky's "Boris." Olin Downes says that the young Soviet writes in harsher form than Rimsky-Korsakoff, who made an earlier version of t

Symphony Orchestra Appeals for Support

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
OCT 5

BSO Appeals To Public For Support

Orchestra Brochure Discusses Issue With Union

For the first time in its 62 years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is turning to its public by a general appeal for the support necessary for its continuation. A brochure with a financial statement is being mailed widely, addressed to "those individuals who enjoy its concerts and take pride in its success" and "those who because of their interest in music or from a sense of civic responsibility welcome the opportunity of sharing in its achievement."

Accompanying the brochure is a letter from Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees, stating that it "is intended to give them the information they would desire and properly expect regarding the question of union affiliation, the schedule of concerts, problems of endowment and finance and the special need for public support."

The brochure points out that since the death of Ernest B. Dane last spring the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in need of contributions to supplement those of the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra." The contributions of the friends last season amounted to $72,000, when nearly $110,000 was needed. The deficit this year is likely to be $150,000. It is estimated that $188,000 will be required to meet the expenses of the two seasons.

Concerning union affiliation, the brochure says:

"Since many expressions of concern have been received by the trustees and management due to conflicting reports circulated from time to time with regard to affiliation of the members of our orchestra with the American Federation of Musicians, we shall begin by stating our attitude on this subject. The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred on the conductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing bylaws of the federation. If those bylaws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

A meeting will be held at Symphony Hall Oct. 13, to which those interested in the orchestra will be admitted by application. There will be a musical program and an exhibition.

Festival Uncertainty

The prospects for the coming season include a regular schedule of 108 concerts in Boston and other New England cities, New York and the West; six youth concerts in Symphony Hall and the usual series of Pops concerts and Esplanade concerts. Hope is expressed that the Festival may be resumed in the Berkshires, although this, of course, is a matter of uncertainty. "We expect to be in a position to extend, as we did last summer, the Pops and the Esplanade series, if the Berkshire Festival should again have to be deferred."

The costs of maintaining the orchestra are divided as follows: For salaries, about $600,000; for other expenses, about $150,000; for the maintenance of Symphony Hall, $86,000; for the maintenance of Tanglewood, $6000; and the cutomary contribution to the orchestra's pension fund of $7000. To the orchestra's receipts in addition to the income from concerts should be added $18,600 as interest upon the endowment of $400,000. "The deficit on the gross annual expenditure of nearly a million shows that the orchestra is about 84 per cent self-supporting and that only 16 per cent of its annual needs must be supplied in gifts. Operating results compare favorably with those of any other major orchestra in the country, some of which depend upon contributions of $200,000 annually, says the brochure.

The society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" has included more than 2000 contributors in the past several years. To these and further friends the trustees make their appeal.

"The importance of music and other arts in maintaining morale in time of war has been quite properly stressed. This should not, however, obscure the role which the highest art plays as a permanent element in the life of the community, whether in peace or in war. For this reason the Boston Symphony Orchestra can ligitimately appeal to its friends to maintain it at the highest pitch of excellence lest, when peace is restored, we may find that the effort of our enemies to destroy our cultural life has to some degree been successful."

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHELSEA, MASS.
EVE. RECORD

This Clipping From OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN
OCT 10 1942

Peace With Musicians' Union Now Seems to Be Possibility

By L. A. Sloper

Hope that the long-standing differences between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians may soon be resolved is seen in the announcement received today by subscribers and Friends of the Orchestra.

The reference, the first statement made by the Trustees on this subject since 1920, at the time of the "strike," follows:

"Since many expressions of concern have been received by the Trustees and Management due to conflicting reports circulated from time to time with regard to affiliation of the members of our Orchestra with the American Federation of Musicians, we shall begin by stating our attitude on this subject. The musical integrity of our institution rests upon the wide discretionary powers we have conferred on the Conductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline. We do not believe our institution can maintain that integrity if our musicians subscribe to the existing by-laws of the Federation. If those by-laws were to be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed."

The last sentence of this paragraph contains the words upon which hope of settlement may be based. It has always been the position of the orchestra management that the "musical integrity" of the orchestra is the prime consideration. Certain by-laws of the musicians union, as they now stand, might interfere with the conductor's control, it seems to have been felt. The hint of a possibility that those by-laws may be amended provides the first official suggestion from either side that a settlement may be reached.

Proposals of modifications in the by-laws to insure the maintenance of the "highest artistic standards" are understood to have come from the union itself—which appears to indicate a pacific attitude. So far as the Trustees are concerned, no disposition is evident to oppose unionization, provided the "musical integrity" of the orchestra is assured.

Whether the orchestra is to be unionized depends of course upon the players themselves, who under the Wagner Act have the sole right to decide how they shall be represented in dealings with the management. At a conference with the press last week, Jerome D. Greene, president of the Board of Trustees, said the players were in agreement with the management as to the necessity for maintaining artistic standards.

If, therefore, the union by-laws are amended in a way satisfactory to the Trustees of the Orchestra, and if the players then decide to join the union, the only non-union symphony orchestra in the United States will have joined union ranks.

Mr. Greene at the press conference strongly emphasized that if this reconciliation does come about, it should be regarded as a victory, not for the orchestra management in obtaining changes in the union by-laws, nor for the union in enlisting the personnel of the orchestra, but for music itself.

This emphasis on the importance of music as an art is found also in the text of the announcement. "The importance of music and other arts in maintaining morale in time of war has been quite properly stressed," says the statement. "This should not, however, obscure the role which the highest art plays as a permanent element in the life of the community, whether in peace or war."

This comment on the importance of art in a free society leads to an appeal by the Trustees for support in maintaining the orchestra at the highest pitch of excellence, "lest, when peace is restored, we may find that the effort of our enemies to destroy our cultural life has to some degree been successful."

The statement estimates that in the coming year, "without revenues from the Berkshire Festival and with an inevitable falling off in royalties from recordings," the Orchestra's operating expenses will exceed operating revenues and endowment income by $150,000; and to this must be added the deficit from last season of $38,000.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
OCT 10 1942

Robert Briggs Engaged by Boston Symphony

Robert Briggs of 30 First Street, 19-year-old trombonist, has been hired by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and played his first concert last night under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Briggs, said to be the youngest member of the orchestra, was engaged by Dr. Koussevitzky originally to fill out the trombone section for the new Shostakovitch seventh symphony. Holder of a scholarship at the Berkshire Music Center last summer, Mr. Briggs had resumed his studies at the New England Conservatory of Music when the opportunity came to join the orchestra.

Symphony and Public

We are fighting the war to keep alive the best things in America, and to make them better. These best things are both national and local. Every community has to look at its own possessions, decide which are really the best, and then, as a part of the general "war effort," see to it that they are sustained, fortified, and secured for the generations yet to come.

Here there is no single local institution which brings anything more distinctive into the life of Boston than the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or speaks more distinctively for Boston throughout the country It is truly a major glory of Boston. For more than sixty years it has ministered after its unique fashion to the artistic and spiritual needs of the city.

For nearly forty of these years it looked to one generous citizen of extraordinary vision and public spirit, Henry L. Higginson, for its backbone of support. Then the public, which had learned its value, carried it on through subscriptions, of steadily increasing distribution, to the deficits inseparable from every such enterprise—smaller deficits, be it said, than orchestras in larger cities have usually had to meet.

In recent years there was one among the more than 2000 Friends of the Orchestra whose generosity, in this time of mounting costs, recalled the days of Major Higginson. With the lamented death of Edward B. Dane, President of the Trustees of the Orchestra when his life ended last April, it becomes more than ever necessary to invoke the support of the public, and now a much larger public than that which came to the rescue in 1918.

Yesterday the patrons and friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra read a carefully considered statement issued by the trustees, and the press made the substance of it known to the entire community. It would be a great mistake for anybody to refrain from responding to it because a large need seems to call for large gifts only. It is a community need calling for a community response, in subscriptions both large and small.

Is the Orchestra a luxury or a necessity? It is both—a luxury because, in the longest term of any of its conductors, Serge Koussevitzky, now entering the nineteenth year of his conductorship, has brought it to an unprecedented pitch of beauty and power. It is a necessity because no other single agency can do more for the bruised spirit of man in such a time as this.

To lose the war would be to lose this luxury which is also a necessity. To win the war is to save it, yet it cannot be saved if, through any want of "war effort," it is permitted to perish. Both the artistic and the civic pride of Boston are challenged at this moment. Who can doubt that the challenge will be met?

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 8 - 1942

MUSICIAN'S INGENUITY ENRICHES SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Oct. 7.—(AP) A musician's ingenuity will enable the Boston Symphony orchestra to give its initial performance of Shostakovitch's new Seventh Symphony tomorrow night without varying a note from the original score.

When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, decided to include the composition on the program, it was discovered that the ordinary bass clarinet would not reproduce some of the very deep tones of the symphony.

Rosario Mazzeo, the orchestra's bass clarinetist, spent several months in designing and producing a special clarinet with five new low notes added beyond the usual final bass note. Both Mazzeo and Dr. Koussevitzky said the new sub-bass clarinet will reproduce the deepest notes of the Russian composer's work.

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
OCT 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
OCT 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 8 - 1942

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
TELEGRAM-NEWS
OCT 8 - 1942

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
OCT 8 - 1942

This Clipping From JOHNSTOWN, PA.
TRIBUNE
OCT 9 - 1942

SUSPENSE, With Music

By JOHN SELBY
Wide World Arts Editor

NEW YORK—This is a suspense story about Samuel Barber, one of our few A-grade young composers, whose honor it is to have Toscanini choose his Adagio for Strings as the first American composition he ever has recorded for Victor. Or any other company.

SAMUEL BARBER

Mr. Barber has what it takes to make a go of serious composition, even good connections. His aunt was the eminent contralto, Louise Homer, and his friends are numerous and powerful. He is even persona grata in the Toscanini household, which is quite something these days.

At the age of 32, he reached what represents the heights in this country—and then something kicked the props out from under him. See last paragraph.

Barber started composing with a piano piece called "Sadness" when he was a romping youngster of seven years. He entered Philadelphia's Curtis Institute of Music very young, and early convinced its founder, Mary Louise Curtis Bok, of his value. Graduated in 1928, a boy of 18, he began the tough job of making his way as a composer of serious music.

Honors Flow to Him

In 1935 the prix de Rome went to him, and the Pulitzer award in music as well. The latter was duplicated next year, and from 1935 through 1938 he worked abroad.

First fruit of this was a symphony in one movement which Artur Rodzinski conducted at Salzburg in 1937, the first and apparently the last American work to be performed at that Tyrolean festival.

Shortly after Barber's return to the United States Toscanini, who had met the composer when the Maestro still had a villa on Lake Maggiore, decided the young man's work was worthy and began playing him. Toscanini even took some of his things to South America when he made his famous tour with the NBC Symphony.

Our hero began gaining momentum forthwith. The venerable Metropolitan Opera asked him to compose a work for it, but that fell through because Barber insisted on choosing his own libretist, and the Met already had a candidate in mind.

Opera Commission

Then Serge Koussevitzky commissioned Barber to do an opera, with no strings attached. Then Howard Hughes decided to do a full-length experimental movie with the sky as the limit.

"That I really liked," says Barber. "Music was to be a full partner, not something scuffed up at the end. The plan was to meet for several weeks of discussion and planning before a foot of film was shot, and then to build it all together, like a house."

Barber was to report at Hollywood September 15. On September 16, however, he reported to the Army at New Cumberland, Pa.

Barber's a private now.

OSTON TRAVELER, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 19

WAY, WAY, DOWN HERE—Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shows where the deep mellow growl of the "sub-bass clarinet" he designed comes from. The newly-invented instrument provides the extra deep notes in the score of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony, played in Boston for the first time today, at the opening concert of the Symphony.

IN SEASON'S FIRST BOW—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra welcomed by audience at opening of 62d season yesterday.

62d Symphony Season Opens to Strains of Shostakovitch

The 62d season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was begun at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, when Serge Koussevitzky conducted for the first time in this city the war-inspired and disputed Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Though set against the new background of the war, this opening was in essentials like many another. There was the formally-garbed orchestra, the predominantly social audience, in which are the same faces, many of them, year after year. There were the usual airy lobby chatter and the usual departure of some people before the last composition of the afternoon had been finished. For the 19th inaugural Friday afternoon, an audience rose to greet impeccably-groomed Serge Koussevitzky as he first walked upon the stage. Once again he bade listeners to sing "The Star Spangled Banner," a practice which he started some weeks before Pearl Harbor.

There was another background, not immediately discernible, but of prospective importance: the reported negotiations between the Boston Symphony and James Caesar Petrillo's American Federation of Musicians. A third, and trivial, difference may be recorded: the weather was warmer than at any Symphony opening within memory.

Beethoven a Time Filler

Beethoven's Second Symphony, coming first upon the program, must have been to some listeners a mere filler of time and space before the martial fury of the Shostakovitch Symphony. However revolutionary the Beethoven Second may have seemed when new, it is now early and comparatively undynamic Beethoven, more elegant than exciting. Mr. Koussevitzky's performance of it was nonetheless exciting, because the first and last movements boiled along at stroboscopic speed, and every accent was duly emphasized.

Since the Shostakovitch Symphony was introduced to this country by Mr. Toscanini and Mr. Koussevitzky last Summer, opinion has raged about it, especially on the part of critics. This reviewer's initial observations noted it to be "vast, substantial and very remarkable . . . probably too long, but its material is always arresting and always interesting." These opinions may stand, and in certain respects be carried further.

First of all, the Symphony is music of the strongest emotional feeling. Not only was it composed under hostilities, but Shostakovitch's purpose in writing it was directly concerned with the Nazi invasion of Russia, and there is a vague descriptive program. Indeed, you have here a work extraordinary in all music, for a variety of reasons which must be detailed in a Sunday article.

On Fire with Russia's Tragedy

The critical argument that the Seventh is flashy and theatrical seems rather specious. No composer was ever more sincere. None ever wrote with more conviction. It is by turn nostalgic and harsh, elegiac and filled with the righteous fire and the tragedy of the embattled Soviet people. This is music of the people, from the commonest upward, and such is what Shostakovitch intended.

The first movement, perhaps the finest of all, could be a complete and perfect tone poem, with its vast panorama of mood and its gigantic formal structure. The strongly colored second movement reminds you of the Shostakovitch Sixth Symphony, especially of its solos, a favorite device with the composer.

Now one hour and 15 minutes is a long time to concentrate on music, and that is what yesterday's performance took. It seemed to me that the third and fourth movements, admirable though they are, have the greatest amount of repetition and might be cut. Yet the form is so symmetrical that cutting might prove mutilation.

Typical of Shostakovitch

Perhaps the Seventh will be known as a great, eclectic masterpiece. It is typical Shostakovitch, to be sure, but you find traces of Ravel, Sibelius and Tchaikovsky in the orchestration. The typical Shostakovitch is found in that resolute and savage war march of the first movement, built out of an almost common sequential tune. The typical Shostakovitch is also found in the folk-like song of the second movement, in the pedal points and ostinati, clever use of color and dissonance and masterly orchestration.

Dispute will continue about this music and its esthetic purpose. In the meantime a lot of people, this writer included, like it very much. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:15.—C. W. D.

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
OCT 10 1942

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
OCT 10 1942

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
STAR
OCT 10 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY COST IS $840,000

Boston Symphony's budget for this season includes salaries, $600,000; soloists' fees, music, etc., $150,000; maintenance of Symphony Hall, $86,000; pensions fund for players, $7,000. The orchestra has an endowment from the estate of the late founder, Col. Higginson, of $400,000, revenue from which last year was $18,600. Balancing estimated revenues against cost, the orchestra needs this season $188,000 as straight donations. None of the cost is controlled by the Musical union, as the Boston Symphony is the only non-union major orchestra in America. The total yearly cost of the Boston Orchestra is over $840,000, which is several times the annual cost of the T.S.O.

133

Many Friends Welcomed After Summer Separations

Mrs. William G. Adams Came from Belfast, Me., For Event—Groups of Debutantes in Evidence

By ALISON ARNOLD

In spite of summer temperatures yesterday, the winter season began officially with the first Friday afternoon Symphony Concert of the 1942-43 season. For more than 60 years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has ministered to the artistic and spiritual needs of this city. And at no time in history has the need been greater than in these chaotic months of World War II.

To some Bostonians, the Friday afternoon concerts are simply "the thing to do." But to many others, they represent a weekly oasis in a desert of dark days. When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared on the platform yesterday, the huge audience rose in one great body to greet him with wild applause. And there was hardly a stir in the vast hall during the playing of the national anthem, which preceded the concert.

For the first time in Boston the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 7 was performed, and the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds when spontaneous applause broke out after the first movement. In great contrast, and symbolic of more peaceful times, was Beethoven's Second Symphony in D major. Beethoven is one of Boston's favorites, and Bostonians are loyal.

The first concert of the season always seems like a sort of welcome home. Friends greet friends after the long summer and there are familiar faces everywhere. Many of the ticket holders have had the same seats for years. Mrs. Charles Goddard Weld sat in her usual seat on the left aisle, her beautifully coiffred white hair set off by her black gown. With her was her sister, Mrs. Horace H. Soule.

Mrs. Robert Treat Paine is one of the many regular Friday afternoon subscribers who prefers sitting in the balcony. She was present yesterday, the essence of chic as always, in a slim black costume with which she wore a becoming white hat and a sable cape. Arriving with her was Mrs. Richard Sears, in moss green.

Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson and her Beacon street neighbor, Mrs. Arthur Bell, are also neighbors at the Symphony and sit together each Friday. Mrs. Moses Williams was chatting with friends before the concert, and in the midst of another pleasant group was Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jackson Holmes were other inveterate Symphony-goers we glimpsed in the throng, and still others were Mrs. John W. Bartol, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt and Mrs. Boylston Beal, whose daughter, Mrs. E. Sturgis Hinds, wore the uniform of the Massachusetts Women's Defense Corps.

With Mrs. Albert Cameron Burrage, Jr., was her pretty daughter, Mrs. Norman Armour, Jr. (Cynthia Burrage). Both mother and daughter wore smart tailleurs, Mrs. Armour's with a frothy pink frill at the neckline and in her hair a black velvet bow, which made her look just like a little girl. With Mrs. James J. Minot, long black fringe swaying on the skirt of her black frock, was her post-debutante daughter, Miss Eleanor Minot. And still other mothers and daughters attending together were Mrs. Paul Clark and Miss Jean Clark, and Mrs. Robert Belknap and Mrs. Brewster Stetson.

There were not the lines of shiny limousines at the entrance as in others took advantage of the beautivenient subway nearby, while still others took advantage o fthe beautiful day and walked to Symphony Hall. Among the latter was Mrs. Walter Powers, whom we saw strolling up Huntington avenue before the concert.

Mrs. William G. Adams, who will live on Commonwealth avenue this winter, came down from her summer home in Belfast, Me., to attend the concert, and was gowned in the always popular black and white. Mrs. Warren Bigelow and her niece, Miss Priscilla Williams, came from Duxbury, as is their weekly custom. Arriving with Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Jr., was Mrs. Gilbert E. Fuller, Jr. (Faith Kidder).

We noticed scores of debutantes in the audience. Miss Mary Lothrop, who was with her mother, Mrs. Francis B. Lothrop, wore a becoming frock of victory red, and Miss Lee Withington was patriotic in wide red, white and blue stripes and carried a bright red bag. With her was Miss Grace Eddy in a summery flowered print. Afterward most of them went on to Miss Constance Bigelow's coming out party at the Women's Republican Club, which was given for her by her mother, Mrs. Cleveland Bigelow, and her aunt, Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer.

The youngest generation turned out in large numbers and there were many sub-debutantes in evidence. Virginia Brown and Patsy Warren were selling war stamps in the lobby before the concert began, and doing a rushing business, too. Titian-haired Sally Higginson was with her mother, Mrs. Charles Higginson, and still others were Constance Dexter, Mary Callan, Lorraine Lyman and Nancy Howes.

The most youthful member of the audience was young Cortland Converse, who attended with his mother, Mrs. Parker Converse. He topped his gray flannel shorts with a blue sweater, and his mother wore a wine red snood with her Oxford gray suit. Mrs. Grafton B. Fay and her sister, Miss Nancy Eliot, arrived together, and with Mrs. Edward Harding was her son, Ted.

Somehow it seems a bit out of place to describe clothes at great length this year, although there were some stunning costumes in the audience. Mrs. Basil Gavin's brown frock was sprinkled with white coin dots and with it she wore a brown velvet beret and beige gloves. She and her husband have moved in town from their lovely home in Millis for the winter, and she confessed that she doesn't care much for the change.

Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller's tailored ensemble combined gray and luggage tan most successfully. Greeting her was Mrs. Arthur Fiedler (Ellen Bottomley), whose younger sister, Miss May Bottomley, was also present. Joining them in the lobby was Mrs. John Moseley Abbot. Miss Olivia Ames was extremely pretty in an emerald green frock and matching hat.

We could go on forever and then we wouldn't be able to tell you all the familiar faces we recognized. In fact, it would be like reading the social register from cover to cover. At any rate, a few more were Mrs. George Saltonstall West, Miss Julia Barbour, Mrs. James Lawrence, Jr., Mrs. Charles Cotting, Miss Edith Hall, Mrs. Samuel E. Morison, Mrs. John Post, Mrs. William Dexter, Mrs. John Monks, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Mrs. George Swift, Mrs. Harry B. Stebbins, Mrs. Robert F. Estabrook, Mrs. Roswell Parish, Miss Jeannie Robinson, Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French and Mrs. William Coburn.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
OCT 11 1942

ASIDES OF CONCERT AND OPERA WORLDS

SHOSTAKOVICH'S Seventh symphony will be played by at least ten major symphony orchestras within the next few months. Arturo Toscanini is conducting it this week with the New York Philharmonic. Serge Koussevitzky is planning to lead it in Boston and twice in New York as well as on tour. Artur Rodzinski will direct it in Cleveland, Frederick Stock in Chicago, Carlos Chavez in Mexico City, Eugene Ormandy in Philadelphia and on tour, Hans Kindler in Washington, D. C., Sir Ernest MacMillan in Toronto and Leopold Stokowski in Los Angeles, San Francisco and at a Western desert Army camp.

Dr. Koussevitzky, passing through town the other day, disclosed plans for his Boston Symphony season. He will schedule Shostakovich's First, Second, Third, Fifth and Sixth symphonies and his piano concerto, besides the Seventh. New works include Bohuslav Martinu's First symphony and a symphony by Nicolai Berezowsky, both commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation; Roy Harris's Fifth symphony, William Schuman's Second cantata entitled "A Free Song," Samuel Barber's two Essays for Orchestra, Frederick Jacobi's Ode for Orchestra, and two interludes from Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera "The Island God." Dr. Koussevitzky will revive Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," Mahler's Fifth symphony and Bruckner's Eighth, Debussy's "La Demoiselle Elue," Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" and Scriabin's "Prometheus."

A Soviet Symphony That Is Being Heard All Over the Country

The indications are that contemporary Soviet music will have a dominant position on the country's symphony programs. Dr. Koussevitzky will direct Miaskovsky's Symphony No. 21, Prokofieff's Second sympony, and a symphony by Khrennikoff. And it is reported that Toscanini is planning to introduce with the NBC Symphony Orchestra the Second symphony of Dimitri Kabalevsky, composer of the charming score for the Soviet film "Spring Song."

Additional gleanings from Edward Johnson's press conference outlining the Metropolitan Opera's plans: "Boris Godunoff" will be sung in Italian. . . . Charles Kullman will sing Des Grieux for the first time in "Manon." . . . Jacques Gerard, the new French-Canadian tenor, will make his debut in "Lakmé" with Lily Pons. . . . Frances Greer, one of the Metropolitan auditions winners, will make her debut as Musetta in "Bohème." . . . Lillian Raymondi, new soprano, will sing Yniold in "Pelléas." . . . The general policy in determining the works to be revived was to produce only what "we were perfectly sure the public would accept."

The Philharmonic-Symphony Society has contributed more than 1,000 pounds of metal to the salvage campaign. Most of it was found in the society's old storeroom in Carnegie Hall by Saul Goodman, tympanist, and Maurice Van Praag, personnel manager. Among the things they threw into the scrap pile were steel music stands, a brass chime rack, copper piano wiring, steel casters for celesta and two German machine tympani, with paddle wheel pedals, imported by Gustav Mahler.

The call of the armed services had little effect on musical organizations last season, but now, with the season just started, the mail is full of communications showing that organizations are beginning to feel the pinch. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony has just lost its first man, Abraham Pearlstein, 25-year-old bass trombonist, who has been given leave of absence to enlist. The Doctors Orchestral Society, starting its fifth season, writes that "since many of the musical doctors have entered the service the orchestra will be glad to accept new members." And the Orchestra of the New Friends of Music is in danger of being disbanded entirely, for it has prided itself on the youth of its members and now so many have gone that the five concerts planned for December and January have been abandoned.

The Utah State Symphony Orchestra recently felt the pinch in an acute form. Hans Heniot, its regular conductor, was drafted. The organization sent a frantic message to Sir Thomas Beecham to save the orchestra from collapse. Sir Thomas hastened to Salt Lake City. The result, as wired by Gail Martin, was "Orchestra played like demigods. All Salt Lake intoxicated. Sir Thomas has done more for advancement of music than any one here in fifty years. He was soul of geniality and consideration."

The Dessoff Choirs, one of the organizations that did suffer last season—it had to abandon its performance of Haydn's "Creation" because so many male members left—has thought up a plan to counteract the shortage. Since the services took many of its members, it is planning to turn the tables and take in service men. A notice has been sent out to those men more or less permanently stationed in New York. Addressed to "Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marines!" it asks: "Do any of you want to join an amateur chorus? The Dessoff Choirs invite you to sing with them. Requirements are that you have a clear singing voice and can find your way round the printed page and that, should you sign up, you will come to all rehearsals unless your Uncle Sam says you can't. We plan a concert on Jan. 30 at Town Hall, program centered around Josquin des Prés. Do come. It's great fun. And we need you!"

A brochure has been addressed "to the patrons and friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in an appeal for $188,000 to pay off last season's deficit and to finance this season's schedule. The amount of the deficit carried over from last season is $38,000. This year's operating revenues and endowment income are expected to fall short of expenses by $150,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS
OCT 12 1942

LITVINOFF AND CONDUCTOR—Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff (right) sits with Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky after a concert at the Berkshire Music Center near Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 11 1942

First Symphony Concert Oct. 20

Boston Orchestra to Give Shostakovitch Work on Opening Program

SHOSTAKOVITCH'S new Seventh Symphony, regarded in the musical world as "the symphony of the hour," will be the feature of the Boston Symphony's first Providence concert of the season, to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Metropolitan Theatre, Tuesday evening, Oct. 20.

It also served to open the Symphony's 62nd season in Boston last Friday and is a major item on programs of the country's leading orchestras. Practically as one, conductors have eagerly stretched out their hands to get it. With his student orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshires last August, Dr. Koussevitzky gave the symphony its first concert performance in this hemisphere.

Its first performance anywhere was last March 1, in Kuibyshev, where the composer wrote the last movement after being evacuated from Leningrad. Three movements had been composed a year ago in Leningrad, while the city was under siege. The symphony reflects in musical terms the determination of the Russian people to prevail against the invaders of their country.

The symphony was photographed page by page upon miniature film in Moscow and flown to Egypt. From there it was transported to the United States and put on paper. Set for the last half of the Providence program, the Shostakovitch work will be preceded in the first half by Haydn's Symphony in G-major, No. 88.

FRIENDS OF SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TO MEET

An open meeting will be held by the friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, to which all who may be interested in the orchestra are invited. After the meeting, Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra will provide the music, performing Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88.

Jerome D. Green, president of the trustees of the orchestra, will preside at the meeting, at which important matters of its present and future will be presented and discussed. A collection of paintings by the great masters, loaned by former Governor Alvan T. Fuller, will have its first public showing.

This Clipping From GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES
OCT 13 1942

When the Boston Symphony orchestra has to seek an agreement with the union leader Petrillo, we hold that the administration that has permitted such need to become possible has betrayed the people.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
OCT 14 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY NETS $22,229 FROM DRIVE

BOSTON, (U.P.)—The 62-year-old Boston Symphony was temporarily out of the "red" today. President Jerome D. Greene said at a meeting yesterday that a drive for funds already had netted $22,229 and that other sources would swell the sum to $42,000. The orchestra's deficit for last season was $38,000. Greene said that efforts now would be made to raise $150,000—the prospective deficit for the current season.

Oct. 14, 1943

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 14 1942

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
OCT 14 1942

OCTOBER 14, 1942

OCTOBER 14, 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
OCT 12 1942

THE MAIL BAG

No Reason to Stop Sibelius Music

To the Editor:

Once again that dread specter, "war hysteria," has raised its ugly head in the form of a letter by R. P. Loeffler, in which he complains about the playing of Sibelius's symphonies. That same cry was raised in 1917-18, and again in this war, about the great German masters by a small minority who, under the spell of war hysteria, lost all sense of balance.

Obviously Mr. Loeffler knows nothing about Mr. Sibelius as a person and less about his music, to make a statement that Sibelius's music has no soul. Sibelius has, to a greater degree than probably any other great composer, interpreted the soul of his own nation, and of this most of the prominent music critics and symphony conductors are agreed. I need only refer to such noted men as Olin Downes, Koussevitsky and Toscanini, et al., ad infinitum. To demand that we stop playing Sibelius's music because Finland, by force of circumstances, happens to be lined up against our present ally, Russia, is sheer childishness. Anyone who knows—and I advise Mr. Loeffler to read the history of Finland—what the Finns suffered while under Russian domination for over 100 years will understand why the Finns don't waste any love for the Russians; but neither do they care for the Nazis.

Does one's opposition to Communism make one a Fascist? Such an argument is based on the supposition that there are only two ideologies, Fascism and Communism, and overlooks the fact that there is also such a thing as democracy, which has no affinity with either of the totalitarian ideologies.

Sibelius a Fascist? I have yet to hear anyone, who really knows that greatest of contemporary composers, say that. And let us remember Sibelius did all of his composing years before the nations of the world were lined up as in the present struggle. Nay, even before we Americans exalted the Finnish nation to the high heavens for its integrity and honesty in paying its debts to us.

In the name of common sense, let us not permit the hysteria of war to carry us to such depths as to refuse to play the works of the masters, just because the countries of their origin happen to be lined up on the wrong side in this great War for Freedom. In my estimation, the spirit manifested by Mr. Loeffler is the very thing we Americans are fighting against. Let us not lose our heads.

M. N. L.

—

To the Editor:

Mr. Loeffler is worried about Sibelius. He wonders whether Sibelius would ever say to the Finnish people, "Finnish people, listen to the Shostakovich Leningrad Symphony." May I suggest to Mr. Loeffler not to worry that point. Some day the people of Finland will be free and then they'll listen to anything they want to hear.

Of course, if Mr. Sibelius did say, "Bolshevistic criminals must be destroyed," I'll agree they were nasty words. But what would you expect him to say under the Fascist Mannerheim Government, "More power to the Soviet Union"? I remember when our people were all out for "little Finland" and Mannerheim, too. But this is beside the point. Here is Mr. Loeffler, a free man, just begging for restrictions, and telling me that if he had his way, I could never hear the music of the exquisite "Swan of Tuonela" composition. Me, a free American who has every right to hear what I please. That's pretty hard to swallow, even if Mr. Loeffler and those who agree with him have a soul. And what's more, if Mr. Loeffler was trying to deprive me of the music of Sibelius for the sake of the Russians, it might interest that man to know that the Russians would be the first to defend and conserve a thing of "amazing mathematical beauty," as he describes the compositions of Sibelius.

It's a good idea to get tough with the Nazis, and to help our Russian allies, but please, do something more constructive than "pick" on some "soul-less" yet beautiful and perfect music.

SARA WOLFBERG.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
OCT 15 1942

The Seventh Symphony

Never before has the debut of a major musical composition aroused public interest to the extent of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, which will be played at the Cleveland Orchestra concerts tonight and Saturday night.

The Seventh Symphony was written under epochal circumstances, when the German Army was sweeping deep into Russia last year. The first performance in March of this year at Kuibyshev on the Volga was a state occasion in Russia. However, the history of the symphony up to that point is not unique. Other works have been written by eminent composers in times of national crisis and played at state functions. What sets this work apart is the public curiosity displayed toward it in other parts of the world, particularly in England and America.

The orchestral score was photographed on 100 feet of microfilm. The little tin box in which it was packed was flown by way of Egypt and Brazil to New York. The symphony was played in London on June 29, by Toscanini over N. B. C. on July 19, and by Koussevitsky on Aug. 14 at the Berkshire Music Center.

Great composers more firmly established than the 36-year-old Russian have waited years to hear one of their compositions performed, and some of the world's masterpieces have waited even more years for the acclaim accorded the Seventh in a period of a few months.

It would be easy to attribute this public enthusiasm entirely to the circumstances of war, but additional factors must be taken into account. Only within the last century did Russia influence the music of the western world. Bach, Mozart and Beethoven had laid away their pens before Russia found herself. Then she produced a group of composers who displayed originality and genius never surpassed. In this century Stravinsky and Prokofieff won international acclaim. Only in the last decade Shostakovich proved himself at least their equal. Thus the world's musical attention has been more and more centered on Russia.

The music Shostakovich composes stands on its own feet. The war only adds to a public interest fully justified by the composer's past accomplishments.

Boston Players 'Minds Open' On Union Issue

Trustees' Head Says Men Agree A. F. M. Must Offer Protection to Art Ideals

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now the only non-union major orchestra in this country, are willing the consider affiliation of the orchestra with the American Federation of Musicians, if the A. F. of L.'s affiliate's rules and practices should become such as to offer the orchestra the essential protection of its ideals.

Jerome D. Greene, president of the orchestra's trustees, who made this statement in a speech received here yesterday, also pointed out that under the Wagner act the question of joining the union lies exclusively with the musicians of the orchestra. On this subject there is no issue between the musicians and the trustees. "Both are facing the problem with minds open to any proposal consistent with the integrity of the orchestra's ideals and with due regard to the material as well as the artistic welfare of the organization," Mr. Greene said.

Mr. Greene made his speech Tuesday night at a public meeting at Symphony Hall, Boston, under the auspices of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The trustees, in a statement ten days ago, said that the musical integrity of the institution rested on the wide discretionary power conferred upon the conoductor in selecting personnel and in matters of discipline, and they did not believe that this integrity could be maintained under the federation's present by-laws. "If these should be amended so as to permit the full and free pursuit of the highest artistic standards, our chief cause for anxiety would be removed," the trustees said.

Since the announcement, in that statement, that the Boston Symphony needed $188,000 to balance its 1942-'43 budget, $22,229.10 has been contributed by 670 donors, Mr. Greene said.

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, presented the second regular concert of its 62d season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was as follows:

Barber. . . .Overture, "School for Scandal," Op. 5
Brahms. . . . .Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90
Berlioz. . .Excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 17

You always have the peculiar feeling of taking three bites on a cherry when it comes to inferring that a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra was not quite so wondrously effective as is almost always the case, but the impression persists that something—possibly the juxtaposition of an enormously romantic conception of Brahms against an even more romantic conception of Berlioz—was present to diminish the full measure of satisfaction in the concert as a whole.

Berlioz, of course, can take all the romanticism the traffic will bear, and improves in mathematical progression as the conductor feels the emotional sweep of his music. The lack of necessary programmatic contrast, however, was not entirely at the root of the matter, for the orchestra itself was not always up to its usual astonishing standard. In any case, it is a purely relative observation, for it is hardly overzealous provincialism to state that the Boston Symphony orchestra can compete only with the Boston Symphony orchestra. Let us settle, then, by saying that it can play with more evenly distributed virtuosity than it did yesterday.

The revival of the Berlioz excerpts, which followed by a week the New York Philharmonic's performance of the whole symphony, chorus, soloists and all, was by all odds the most rewarding section of the program. And it was, let us hasten to add, performed with overwhelming technique by the orchestra and interpreted by the conductor with all the passionate fervor of a young lover.

Dr. Koussevitzky's flair for Berlioz is positively incandescent. The sudden pulsating fortissimos, the extremes of orchestral balance, the delicate inner harmonies, the erotic nuances; all these he knows, understands and loves, and he conveys them superbly through the orchestra. In his devoted hands, Berlioz reveals indisputably his extraordinary genius as the fountainhead of orchestral coloring, a fact superbly illustrated by the Queen Mab scherzo which remains to this day one of the most remarkable orchestral scherzos in music. It is absolutely bewitching. As performed yesterday it was breathtaking to boot, the strings achieving prodigies of delicacy.

Notwithstanding its quite trivial melodic material—and Berlioz had an insuppressible instinct for inventing embarrassing tunes—the "Love Scene" is the epitome of romantic effusion. Even without its program (they are obligatory accessories with Berlioz), you might conjecture its romantic background, so unmistakably amorous it is in association. Needless to say, Dr. Koussevitzky extracted every last bit of ardor from the orchestra, blending the responses with all the realism of a fabulous dramatic director staging the play itself. The final section, acutely theatrical, is nevertheless exhilarating, serving admirably to clear the air of its intoxicating aroma. In short, the "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts are great good fun and distinctly not to be missed by those with a romantic turn of mind.

The Brahms was decidedly cloying in conception and not a little ragged in execution. Of the four movements, only the fragrant third was given at just the proper tempo. The first lacked vigor and substance; the second was moody, overly drawn out, and the finale seemed capriciously retarded. The concert opened with a crisp performance of Barber's witty, to-the-point "School for Scandal" overture. The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week's program offers Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Stravinsky's Suite from "Petrouchka" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major ("Eroica").

This Clipping From CHILLICOTHE, OHIO
SCIOTIO GAZETTE
OCT 14 1942

MANHATTAN

BY GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—A ten-gallon sombrero is not too much to take off for famed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Russian gentleman who conducts the Boston Symphony and makes propaganda, early and late, for living composers both American and otherwise. Dr. Koussevitzky said, quite a spell back, that "art must die last in a war."

Summers, the good doctor has been wont to conduct the most plush and perhaps most successful of all summer music festivals—the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, which is a great estate in the southern reaches of Lenox, now the property of the Boston Symphony. The festival well under way, he insisted on founding also a music school like no other in the world. This he called the Berkshire Music Center, and the idea was to give young professionals the best in advanced instruction, and to allow amateurs to sit in with them, and pick up the crumbs. The crumbs made a full meal.

This spring, however, the Berkshire festival was called off on a hint from the government. Then Dr. Koussevitzky's chin went out.

He called together his friends, and announced that he would not give up—would they help? He called together his newspaper friends, and asked the same question. Both groups said yes.

The school went on, cut about 100 from last summer's level of 360 students. Then the doctor announced a festival, using the student orchestra instead of the Boston Symphony.

None of the 3,000 persons who took the first concert on faith will ever forget it. Some were so hoarse from cheering they could not even talk much about it. It rained for the next concert, or the audience would have been doubled. It has grown since.

On the stage of the flatiron-shaped music shed were 105 young musicians, nearly as many girls as boys. They looked bright and shining, even before the doctor entered proudly and picked up his baton. He played a Haydn symphony—No. 88, if you're interested. The audience sat in stunned silence when it was done, and the yelling began.

He played the third "Leonore" overture, and there was more shouting—it sounded like the old days of national political conventions. Then, after intermission, came Dmitri Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony. It's modern music, it's typically Russian, but it's full of tunes.

It was a remark I must have heard fifty times in an hour. "If those kids can play like that, why worry about the Boston Symphony?" they were asking.

MILWAUKEE, WIS
JOURNAL
10/13/42

Deficit in Boston

A brochure has been addressed "to the patrons and friends of the Boston symphony orchestra" in an appeal for $188,000 to pay off last season's deficit and to finance this season's schedule. The amount of the deficit carried over from last season is $38,000. This year's operating revenues and endowment income are expected to fall short of expenses by $150,000.

Oct 17 '96

DAILY GLO

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky revived the three orchestral movements from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at the Boston Symphony concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, thus making some atonement for the prevalent and inexcusable neglect of the French composer. The other items of the program, the second of the season, were Samuel Barber's Overture, "The School for Scandal," and Brahms' Third Symphony.

Although neglect of Berlioz has been both general and inexcusable, one must say, in fairness to Mr. Koussevitzky, who admires Berlioz, that the Boston conductor has played more of the French composer here than many have done elsewhere.

The music of Berlioz is a romantic world by itself, and that with which this reviewer is familiar retains both its color and its heat. Weber, Schumann, Liszt and Wagner were romantics of the first order, but individual temperament accounted for basic differences in their romanticism. Berlioz, with the extra difference of being French, and fiery French, at that, was the arch-romantic as well as the great orchestral innovator, and he was all virtuosity, color and passion. At his best he still wields an emotional power like that of no other composer. Esthetically speaking — being careful to limit the matter to esthetics—he must have run a high fever most of his life.

Upsetting the original sequence of movements a little, Mr. Koussevitzky began with the Love Scene, which he followed with the "Queen Mab" scherzo and the movement which begins with Romeo, alone and reflective, and ends with the joyous din of the Capulets' party.

Not even in the second act of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde," which must owe quite a little to Berlioz, will you find love music more scorching than in "Romeo and Juliet." And the instrumentation is a miracle of richness and glowing beauty. Not even in Ravel or Rimsky-Korsakoff will you find music more virtuosic or more brightly jewelled than the "Queen Mab" scherzo, which must be one of the most difficult things to play in all music. It is doubtful that even so swanky a family as the Veronese Capulets ever put on a party quite so brilliant as Berlioz makes out, with his brass, strings, woodwind and multiple percussion, but his reporting of that social triumph may be granted a little license.

It should be remembered that Berloiz demands the best of orchestras and a conductor with temperament and sympathy. Yesterday he had them both. The Boston Symphony never played with a more magnificent sound or with greater skill, and Mr. Koussevitzky outdid himself in a magical evocation of Queen Mab. Let us hope that a better day will bring soloists and the whole of "Romeo and Juliet."

Compared to Berloiz, Brahms' romanticism, encased in what was for the corpulent Johannes a pretty tight waistcoat of classicism, was almost lukewarm. But the grave, Autumnal beauties of the F major Symphony received an admirably clear and balanced performance. The second theme of "The School for Scandal" Overture is one that Berlioz himself might have written with pleasure. Like the rest of the Overture, this theme conveys the atmosphere of Sheridan's 18th Century comedy, and such was what the talented young Mr. Barber wanted. The Overture wears well; it merited another hearing.

The program will be repeated at 8:15 tonight. That for next week follows: "The Island of the Dead," Rachmaninoff; "Petrouchka" Suite, Stravinsky; "Eroica" Symphony, Beethoven.—C. W. D.

BERLIOZ MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

His "Romeo and Juliet" Given Hearing

Oct 17 Post

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

As the excitements of Shostakovitch temporarily overshadowed Beethoven's Second at last Friday's Symphony Concert, so yesterday did the assembled instrumental excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" make it difficult for the departing listener to remember that he had heard Samuel Barber's Overture, "The School for Scandal" and the Third Symphony of Brahms earlier in the afternoon.

There were three extraordinary things about these fragments from Berlioz' "dramatic symphony": (1) the music itself, (2) the performance accorded them by Dr. Koussevitzky and an orchestra that was never more responsive to his will, and (3) the fact that he had never before conducted them in this country. In a glass case in the first balcony foyer there was displayed a magazine article, by Leonard Liebling, bearing the title, "Brahms, the Heir of Beethoven." Heir of Beethoven he was indeed and of Schumann as well. And if he was more of a romanticist than the one and a better architect than the other, he was less original, less inspired and hence less important than either. Berlioz, on the other hand, was the heir of nobody, and the artistic progeny that he fathered was as numerous as that of Brahms was scanty. The German ended an epoch; the Frenchman, like a musical Columbus, discovered a new world.

When Mr. Toscanini lately revived the whole of "Romeo" in New York, choruses, solos and all, the reviewers were of the opinion that the best parts of the work were still the familiar instrumental portions. (They used to be familiar in Symphony Hall and let us hope they may become so once again.) Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky presented the tenderly voluptuous Love Scene which Berlioz himself preferred to all his other music, the gossamer-light "Queen Mab" section that makes even Mendelssohn's scherzi seem ponderous, the highly poetic and imaginative passage, "Romeo Alone," and the subsequent gay doings at the house of Capulet, the sheer brilliance of which has seldom been exceeded even by the Russians and the later Frenchmen who helped themselves so liberally from the great treasure house of Berlioz' scores. If it is incredible that the "Fantastic" Symphony should have been written in 1829, it is hardly less incredible that this incomparably richer and more subtle music should have come but a decade later.

To get back to the other two B's in a trio quite different from the one von Buelow had in mind when he coined his catch-phrase, Barber's Overture, introduced here two years ago, is properly gay and bustling but there is more froth here than beer. The audience received it with the indifference that it probably merits. And as for Brahms' Third, which Dr. Koussevitzky has neglected of late, it seemed more than ever the weakest, the most derivative of the four. That it has its moments of eloquence, its pages of intimate beauty none would be so foolish as to deny. In Mr. Burk's notes one might read Walter Niemann's comment that this Symphony's progress from major to minor proclaimed Brahms the "master of resignation." As Dr. Koussevitzky chose to present it the Finale seemed almost the voice of discouragement.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
OCT 18 1942

RECORDS: A LIST OF BEST SELLERS

Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto by Horowitz, Toscanini and NBC Symphony Leads Victor's Albums—Recent Releases

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

THE record companies have made public their best sellers in the popular field each week, but they have been more reticent about the comparative sales of their more elaborate recordings. Occasionally, however, they make some disclosure of best-seller ranking in the latter category, and it is worth noting for the light it casts on public tastes in music and performers.

Victor has just revealed its best sellers for the year 1941. It lists twelve albums and fifteen single disks. First among the albums was the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto in B flat minor, played by Vladimir Horowitz, Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony. This was not unexpected, for the sale of this album in the first two months after its release was unprecedented. More copies were purchased of the one album than had been bought in the entire year of 1933 from the whole Victor catalogue. Was it Tchaikovsky or the performers who stimulated public interest? Both in part, but mostly it was the popularity of the scads of jazz versions of themes from the concerto.

Second among the best-selling albums was the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, again with Horowitz, Toscanini and the NBC Symphony. Brahms, at least this concerto, has not been gobbled up wholesale for Tin Pan Alley dilution. Its rank among the best sellers would seem to depend on its own repute and that of its performers. Or can it be that the purchasers of the Tchaikovsky concerto found the performers so attractive that they turned to Brahms next?

The other ten albums on Victor's list were Brahms's Fourth Symphony, played by Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Strauss's Don Quixote, by Emanuel Feuermann, Eugene Ormandy and Philadelphia Orchestra; Sibelius Seventy-fifth Anniversary Album, Ormandy and Philadelphia; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, Koussevitzky and Boston; Beethoven's Eroica, Toscanini and NBC Symphony; Tchaikovsky's Fifth, Ormandy and Philadelphia; Brahms's Double Concerto, Jascha Heifetz, Feuermann, Ormandy and Philadelphia; Ravel's La Valse, Pierre Monteux and San Francisco Symphony; Mozart's Symphonies Nos. 29 and 30, in one album, Koussevitzky and Boston, and Brahms's Third, Hans Kindler and National Symphony.

Among the leaders of the Victor's best selling singles were Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun, Leopold Stokowski and Philadelphia Orchestra; aria from Charpentier's Louise, Dorothy Maynor; Mussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, Stokowski and Philadelphia; Weber's Invitation to the Waltz, Benno Moiseivitch; Strauss's Voices of Spring, Ormandy and Philadelphia; Preludes from Verdi's Traviata, Toscanini and NBC Symphony; Bach's Toccata and Fugue, E. Power Biggs, organist; Carry Me Back to Herbert Marshall.

Old Virginny, Marian Anderson; aria from Saint-Saëns's Samson and Dalila, Marian Anderson; Rossini's Agnus Dei, Enrico Caruso; excerpt from Rossini's Stabat Mater, Jussi Bjoerling; Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody, Arthur Fiedler and Boston "Pops"; Schubert's Ave Maria, Marian Anderson, and Strauss's Blue Danube and Tales From the Vienna Woods, Stokowski and Philadelphia.

Victor's list does not round out the picture. It would have to be compared with figures from Columbia and the other record makers to obtain a complete best seller list. But this one will do as a point of departure for any one who wants to draw morals about the consumer's taste.

Here and There

Victor is skipping its October release of serious music and hopes thereby to catch up on the pressure on its factory, which has been taxed by the demand . . . Victor also plans to issue popular music fortnightly instead of weekly, for the time being . . . Yehudi Menuhin has contributed 100 of his own records to be sent to Army camps through Armed Forces Master Records, Inc. Mr. Menuhin, who sent the camps what the boys requested, supplied works by Mendelssohn, Lalo, Chausson, Dvorák, Beethoven, Bach, Bruch, Mozart and Wieniawski.

"Count of Monte Cristo"

A lively recording of Alexandre Dumas's story, The Count of Monte Cristo, in an adaptation by George Wells, has Herbert Marshall of stage, screen and radio in the title role. (Decca No. 337, four 12-inch records). The youngsters will go for this performance, and adults who like a rousing adventure tale will not look down on it. Mr. Marshall plays Edmond Dantes with panache, and the cast includes Pedro de Cordoba, Paula Winslowe, Lou Merrill, Elliott Lewis, Frederic Worlock, Fred MacKaye, Jeff Corey, Eric Snowden, Hans Conried, Griff Barnett and Bruce Payne. The production is directed by Mr. Wells and Victor Young is in charge of the music.

In the Popular Field

The newest rage seems to be Der Fuehrer's Face, which stems from a Walt Disney film and which makes raucous, if juvenile, fun of the Nazis. Spike Jones and his City Slickers are making a nation-wide reputation on the basis of their Bluebird recording of these words and lyrics.

Elite Records offers two new disks by Sam Donahue and his orchestra: one has Pennsylvania Polka and Just As Though You Were Here, and the other I'm Old Fashioned and Manhattan Serenade. The playing is smooth, if not out of the ordinary.

From Capitol Records comes three new singles. Jack McLean and his orchestra do I See It in Your Eyes and I Wanna Go Back to West Virginia, the latest State to be tapped by Tin Pan Alley. Gordon Jenkins and his talented orchestra play There'll Never Be Another You and Daybreak. Johnnie Johnston, with orchestra, sings the ubiquitous but pleasant Dearly Beloved as well as Easy to Love

We sometimes get a line on our own family through the neighbors. In Sunday's New York Times it was reported, after an interview with the conductor, briefly in Manhattan, that Dr. Koussevitzky plans to perform this season all the Shostakovitch symphonies with the exception of the Fourth, which its composer is said to have destroyed. According to one rumor the work was extremely radical and Shostakovitch had already decided to trim his harmonic sails in deference to official prejudices. However, his wife, as quoted in the Boston Symphony programme notes, states that he was dissatisfied with the instrumentation of part of the finale and, owing to his congenital objection to any revision of his music, he laid the whole symphony aside. The Second and Third, both of them glorifying the Soviet regime, are little known in this country.

Is it possible that we are in for all the Beethoven symphonies as well? The Second was heard at the first pair of concerts and the Third comes along this week, together with Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Rachmaninoff's "The Island of the Dead," after the painting by Arnold Boecklin. This impressive tone-poem has gone unperformed at Symphony Hall since 1924. The Post said at the time that no other conductor had duplicated the effect that the composer himself made with the music when he introduced it here in 1909. Be that as it may, its return to the repertory is something to look forward to.

This same paragraph in the Times mentioned other pieces that Symphony Hall has not itself announced, namely, William Schuman's cantata, "A Free Song"; Barber's Two Essays, Frederick Jocobi's Ode for Orchestra; two interludes from Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera, "The Island God," which enjoyed only partial success at the Metropolitan in the same season just past; Debussy's cantata, "The Blessed Damozel"; Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," heard last year; Scriabin's "Prometheus," ditto, and the Fifth Symphony of Mahler and the Eighth of Bruckner. The imminence of the last two-named works should delight the growing army of local Brucknerites and Mahlerites; yet the carping critic must ask once again: Why always the same symphonies from these two masters? Why not, for example, the Mahler First, which Bruno Walter would have given us last winter if the priceless Petrillo had not interfered? It is a captivating work, rich in audience-appeal, and Boston has heard it but twice—from Mr. Monteux and Mr. Mitropoulos.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 18 1942

137

Many Interests Fill Life of Shostakovitch

Devoted Family Man and Sports Lover, Wife Reveals

A WIFE'S-eye view of the composer Dmitri Shostakovitch has been made available recently through the Soviet press; it is of immediate interest hereabouts because Shostakovitch's latest symphony, the Seventh, is to be performed in Metropolitan Theatre on Tuesday night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and can also be heard today on the radio from Cleveland.

The composer is now 36. Conductors compete for his works, press and radio discuss him, connoisseurs approve and disapprove.

The war has turned Shostakovitch into a fireman as well as a composer, and bombs often interrupt his creative work. Before the war, music was far from being his only interest in life. He attended soccer, boxing and hockey matches and circuses diligently. He played volleyball. In everything, work or recreation, he displays a remarkably conscientious attitude, his wife, Nina Shostakovitch relates.

DMITRI SHOSTAKOVITCH: As a movie pianist, he was a flop.

Met 15 Years Ago

"We first met 15 years ago," says Mme. Shostakovitch. "Dmitri had just returned from an international competition of musicians in Poland, where he won a certificate of honor. We were both studying at the physio-mathematics department of Leningrad University.

"He was a very bashful, modest young man, but with all this he was already fully matured as a man and musician. He was particularly proficient in mathematics and the exact sciences; on the other hand, he did not like foreign languages.

"In 1922, when Dmitri was 16, his father died and the family found themselves in straitened circumstances. The composer began his working life in the capacity of piano player in a small Leningrad movie house. But this career was destined to failure. Dmitri's direct, spontaneous nature caused his downfall. An American comedy was being shown with huge success three times daily. Every time certain scenes flashed on the screen, the piano was silent and the audience heard the piano player burst into laughter, enjoying the antics of the comedian. For this unseemly behavior, the administration decided to part company with the youthful pianist.

Devoted To His Family

"Since we first met, the years have changed Dmitri very little. Perhaps he has acquired somewhat more dignity and is less tempestuous and nervous. Five years after we met, we were married. Dmitri is very devoted to his family, especially to our children. But his life is by no means confined to his family and personal well being. He simply can't exist without the radio and newspapers. I think he subscribes to every newspaper published throughout the Soviet Union.

"Our two children, Galya and Maxim, are fair-haired and blue-eyed, like their daddy. As yet we aren't attempting to make musicians of them, but nonetheless they both perkily and fairly accurately sing some of his melodies, even his symphonic works. Their most popular tune just now is the theme from the first movement of the Seventh Symphony. They often beg their father to play for them and they clamber onto the lid of the grand piano and sit as quiet as mice, all ears.

"We even took them with us to the general rehearsal of the Seventh Symphony. There they sat in the director's box, and when Prof. Samosud, the conductor, asked them 'What have you come to listen to?' they replied 'Our symphony.' But in the middle of the first movement Maxim suddenly started 'conducting' with such desperate energy that he had to be taken home.

Has Great Capacity for Work

"How does Dmitri work? Well, he demands no 'special' working conditions. He just sits down at his writing desk and writes—morning, noon, evenings. At night he sleeps. If it isn't singing or shouting, noises don't affect him at all. The door of the room where he works is usually open, and often the children romp around in his room. Sometimes Galya climbs onto his knees while he is composing, but in such cases she sits quietly. While Dmitri was finishing the final bars of the Seventh Symphony, for instance, friends who had come in were chatting and joking in the room where he sat. He composes swiftly, writing the score straight through, usually without changes or deletions. Dmitri has a great capacity for work and once having started a composition he is wholly engrossed.

"Even during air raids he seldom stopped working. If things began looking too hot, he calmly finished the bar he was writing, waited until the page dried, neatly arranged what he had written, and took it down with him into the bomb shelter. Whenever he was absent from home during an air raid alarm he always phoned me asking me not to forget to take his manuscripts down into the shelter.

"He is highly critical toward his work, particularly from the viewpoint of time. Once the work is finished, he cools down, so to say, to again warm up and become entirely engrossed with the next work. He almost never reverts to what he has already written and, therefore, already experienced. It is far simpler for him to write anew than to remould a finished work. The Fourth Symphony, for example, never saw daylight because the instrumentation of a few bars of the finale failed to satisfy Dmitri and he could not contemplate rewriting them.

Disliked to Leave Leningrad

"For a long time my husband could not reconcile himself in thought to the necessity of leaving Leningrad. The tense battle for existence waged by his native city, the particularly close companionship under strenuous wartime conditions—all this made him suffer keenly in the unaccustomed safety of Kuibyshev, far from the front lines.

"One of Dmitri's distinguishing characteristics is his extraordinary, almost bureaucratic, conscientiousness and scrupulousness in whatever he may be engaged in. When the Conservatory fire-fighting brigade of which he was a member was barracked, he punctiliously obeyed all regulations and flatly refused repeated suggestions that special allowance be made for him. If anti-typhoid vaccinations are announced, Dmitri is sure to be the first to arrive, and sometimes the only one to show up. At concerts he arrives before the cloakroom attendant, and always turns up ahead of time for duty at the Composers' Union. He is always afraid of being late.

A Great Sports Fan

"He is terribly enthusiastic about whatever he is doing. He is a great sports fan. Before the war, heat or cold, rain or snow, there was not one soccer, ice hockey or boxing match he would miss. As a conservatory student he would even shirk a lesson to run off to the stadium. At home, in Leningrad, he instituted a special 'debit-credit ledger' in which he would diligently enter all games won or lost by all the soccer teams during the current sports season. From various towns to this very day soccer players keep Dmitri fully posted on the 'situation.' He is very fond of volleyball, is an enthusiastic player, and doesn't brook any disrespect toward this game. His favorite entertainment is the circus. At one time he went in for motoring. With his usual punctiliousness he got his driver's license, but was too cautious a driver. When he drives, for example, he never takes the children.

"Chekhov, Gogol, Saltykov-Shchedrin and Maupassant are his favorite authors."

New Shostakovitch Work to Highlight Opening of Symphony Season Tuesday

GIVING Providence concertgoers their first audition of the new Seventh Symphony by the famous Soviet composer, Shostakovitch, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open their season here Tuesday night at the Metropolitan Theatre.

The concert will begin at 8:25, a few minutes earlier than usual, because the Shostakovitch symphony is so long that the orchestra could not otherwise make connections to return to Boston.

The symphony, in four movements, was written in Leningrad while it was under siege, and dedicated "To our Struggle against Fascism, To our Future Victory, To my native City—Leningrad." It has been played in many parts of Russia and a Russian writer has predicted that it "will be played in Red Square by an orchestra of 5000 on the day of our victory." Its first concert performance in this country was given at Tanglewood in the Berkshires under Koussevitzky's direction.

A champion in this country of the composer's works, Dr. Koussevitzky has written these words on the Seventh: "The darker the night, the brighter the stars. In the epoch of destruction and world tragedy values are being created which are firm and stable and part of a supreme and lasting order. In the country where the invading barbarian is inflicting destruction, amid the smoking ruins of peaceful life, one of the greatest creations of musical art has been born."

Another concert of the week will be an organ recital by Frank E. Converse, organist and choirmaster of the Second Baptist Church, East Providence, and organist of the "Mountain Top Hour," Yankee Network, at the Mathewson Street Church, tomorrow evening, at 8:15 o'clock. He will be assisted by Frank E. Streeter, pianist.

In Rogers high school, Newport, tomorrow night, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo pianists, will open the Newport Civic Music Association series.

Composer Romberg Coming

Sigmund Romberg, one of the leading operetta composers of the day, a 40-piece band and vocal soloists, will give a concert on the "pops" order, titled "An Evening with Sigmund Romberg," at the Rhode Island Auditorium Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock.

In addition to selections from his operettas, "The Student Prince," "The New Moon," "The Desert Song," "Blossom Time" and "Maytime," Romberg will conduct music by Tschaikowski, Ravel, Sibelius and Chopin.

Grace Panvino, Garfield Swift, Marie Nash and Gene Marvey are announced as the featured singers. Miss Panvino has toured with the San Carlo Opera Company and appeared with leading symphony orchestras in this country and Canada. Miss Nash has a lead in George M. Cohan's "I'd Rather Be Right," toured the road with Everett Marshall in "Blossom Time," and was a principal of "Higher and Higher" and "Crazy With the Heat."

Mr. Marvey has sung with the New York Opera Comique, in movies, radio and on the concert stage. Mr. Swift has also had considerable experience in concert and on some of the top programs on the air. To create a "pops" atmosphere for the program, the audience will be seated at tables for four, six and eight, and refreshments will be served.

Programs of the week follow:

Converse-Streeter Recital

ORGAN
Pastorale from Second Syphony ... Widor
Toccata and Fugue in D-minor .... Bach
PIANO AND ORGAN
"Kamennoi-Ostrow" ..... Rubinstein
"Sheep May Safely Graze" ..... Bach ORGAN
"Westwind and Eastwind" ..... Rowley
Romance from Fourth Symphony for Organ ..... Vierne
"Fountain Reverie" ..... Fletcher
"Roulade" ..... Bingham
PIANO AND ORGAN
"Egmont" Overture ..... Beethoven
ORGAN
"Come, Ye Disconsolate .. Webbe-Converse
Toccata from Fifth Organ Symphony ..... Widor

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Symphony in G-major, No. 88 .... Haydn
I. Adagio; Allegro
II. Largo
III. Menuetto; Trio
IV. Finale; Allegro con spirito
Symphony No. 7 ..... Shostakovitch
I. Allegretto; poco piu mosso
II. Moderato poco allegretto
III. Adagio—largo—adagio
IV. Allegro non troppo

◈ ◈ ◈

Opera Cast Completed

Several members of the chorus have been intrusted with roles to round out the cast of "The Barber of Seville," which the New England Opera Company will present in the Rhode Island School of Design Auditorium next Sunday and Monday evenings, under the baton of Maestro Danilo Sciotti.

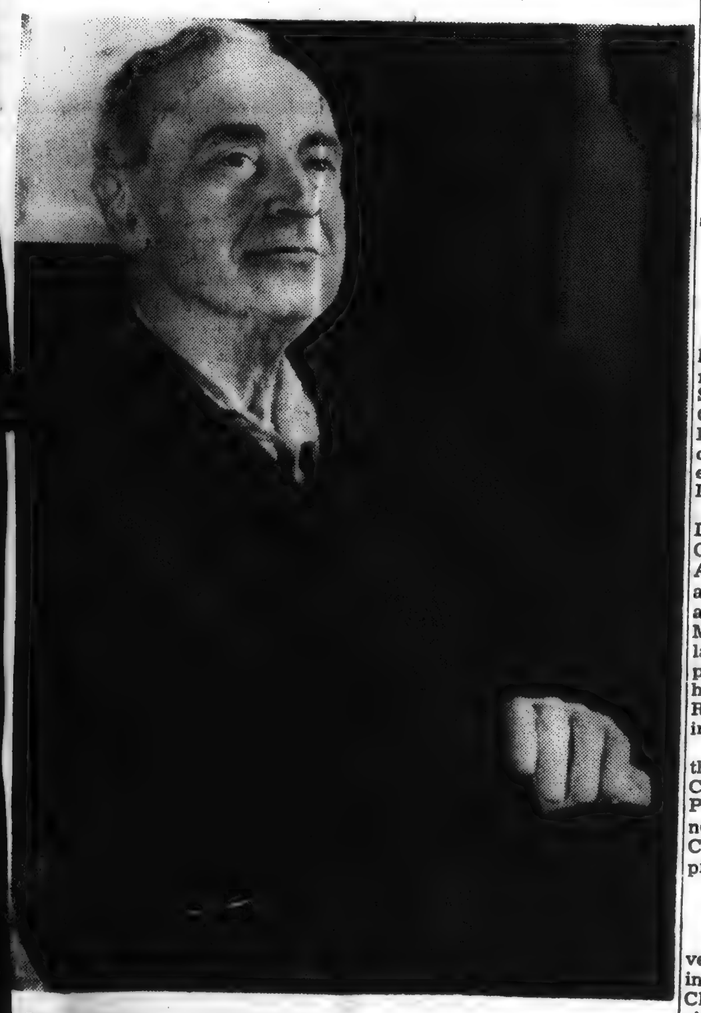
They are Lucy Sudano, as Bertha, Dr. Bartolo's housemaid; Luigi Caprio, Fiorello, servant of Count Almaviva; Ben Heffernan, an officer, and Luigi Regine, Ambrosius, servant of Dr. Bartolo. Nicholas De Marzo, who stepped from the chorus last season to make his debut as a principal in "Il Trovatore," will have his first major role in Don Basilio, Rosina's music teacher. He will be inducted into the Army soon.

Agata Borzi will sing Rosina, and the other leads will be taken by Claudio Frigerio, Eugene Conley and Pompilio Malatesta. Anthony Stivanello will be stage director and Anita Coia Harris rehearsal assistant and pianist with the orchestra.

◈ ◈ ◈

Schubert Club

Alma Horton Rich, of Boston University, will speak at the first meeting of the season of the Schubert Club tomorrow morning, at 10 o'clock, in room 23, Conrad building. Her subject will be "Five Approaches to Pianoforte."



WRAPPED IN A BLANKET Dr. Serge Koussevitzky relaxes between numbers at a Boston Symphony rehearsal.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
OCT 21 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 21 1942

This Clipping From SHELBYVILLE, ILL.
UNION
OCT 31 1942

Symphony Hits New 'Low' With the Bass Clarinet

Boston—(UP)—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest note is equivalent to the lowest Aflat on a piano.

Rosairo Mazzo, bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer.

This Clipping From El Dorado, Ark
Times
OCT 23 1942

This Clipping From HOT SPRINGS, ARK.
NEW ERA
Record
OCT 23 1942

This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
OCT 23 1942

This Clipping From DAYTON, O.
HERALD
OCT 24 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM TALLADEGA, ALA.
DAILY HOME
OCT 24 1942

This Clipping From DUNKIRK, N. Y.
OBSERVER
OCT 24 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ABILENE, KAN.
REFLECTOR
OCT 24 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ABILENE, KAN.
REFLECTOR
OCT 24 1942

This Clipping From VICTORIA, TEX.
ADVOCATE
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From RIVERSIDE, CALIF.
ENTERPRISE
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From HOMESTEAD, PA.
MESSENGER
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From RADFORD, VA.
STAR
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From LYNCHBURG, VA
ADVANCE
OCT 26 1942

This Clipping From LORAIN, OHIO
JOURNAL & TIMES-H
OCT 30 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARRISBURG, ILL.
REGISTER
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From EDWARDSVILLE, ILL.
INTELLIGENCER
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
PRESS
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From REIDSVILLE, N. C.
REVIEW
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From FRANKLIN, PA.
NEWS HERALD
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS-COURIER
OCT 27 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
OCT 28 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEBURNE, TEXAS TIMES REVIEW
OCT 28 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM LAKE WORTH, FLA.
LEADER
OCT 28 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM BLYTHEVILLE, ARK.
COURIER NEWS
OCT 28 1942

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From OLEAN, N. Y.
TIMES-HERALD
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SUN
Press
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS-HERALD
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From HUNTINGTON, IND.
HERALD-PRESS
OCT 29 1942

This Clipping From RICHMOND, CALIF.
RECORD-HERALD
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From RICHMOND, CALIF.
RECORD-HERALD
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From SANDUSKY, OHIO
REGISTER-STAR-NEWS
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 21 1942

136

CHICAGO'S MUSIC CIRCLES MOURN FREDERICK STOCK

Orchestra Director Dies of Heart Attack.

BY CLAUDIA CASSIDY.

(Picture on back page.)

The bottom dropped out of Chicago's music life when Frederick Stock, director of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, died of a heart attack in his home, 1325 Astor street, shortly before noon yesterday. He would have been 70 years old Nov. 11. At his bedside were his wife, the former Elsa Muskulus, and his daughter, Vera, who is Mrs. Alfred M. Wolfe of Chicago.

Funeral services will be held in the Fourth Presbyterian church at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow. Dr. Harrison Ray Anderson, the pastor, will be in charge. Music will be by members of the orchestra.

Only last Thursday night at Orchestra hall Mr. Stock had launched the Chicago Symphony orchestra on its 52d season, establishing a world record for service by starting his own 48th season with that orchestra, his 38th as its director. Because he had not completely recovered from a serious operation undergone last May, his friends were worried about him, hoping he could again tackle the enormous job of carrying a great orchestra thru an arduous season. That night, after the concert, his friend, Dr. Eric Oldberg, was optimistic.

Famous Conductor Dies in Harness.

As every one had known would be the case, Mr. Stock died in harness. On Monday he was at Orchestra hall, talking over plans for the season with Henry E. Voegeli, business manager of the orchestra and his coworker for 43 seasons. Mr. Stock arranged several programs and made an appointment to meet Mr. Voegeli tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Stunned by the death of his friend, and by the loss to the orchestra he served, Mr. Voegeli said yesterday, "It is impossible to say anything adequate. We worked so closely together that I am lost. The country has lost one of its greatest men, a man who gave tremendous service, a man who never thought of himself."

Edward L. Ryerson, president of the Orchestral association, said:

"Everybody interested in good music will be shocked to learn of Mr. Stock's death—particularly those of us in Chicago. We have lost not only one of Chicago's outstanding citizens, but one of the great leaders in music in the country, whose personal influence over many years has meant much to thousands of musicians and lovers of music, on account of a rare combination of great artistic talent and an unusual personality."

Simple, Dignified, Vigorous.

Certainly that is true. There never was a conductor less self-seeking than Frederick Stock. Simplicity itself, quiet, silver haired, with a friendly twinkle that could be quickly quenched by frosty asperity, he had a native dignity no one challenged. In later years he was slight and stooped—until he took charge of the orchestra. Then vigor flowed into him and authority crackled from his baton. More than any other conductor I have known he had a gift of cumulative climax. Given a big score with a sustained and reinforced line, he could carry it to matchless magnificance.

More and more, as the years went by and guest conductors were duly admired and applauded, Chicago came to realize that Frederick Stock was unique in the breadth of his musical knowledge. He could do more kinds of music well than any other conductor who came to challenge, fruitlessly, his deepening place in our affections. He was sound all the way thru, an honest, conscientious, and superb musician. The cheapness of the charlatan was his scorn.

Because of his unremitting effort and the basic soundness of his influence, the Chicago Symphony orchestra has gained and held unquestioned place as one of the great orchestras of our time.

Hans Lange to Conduct.

His work as conductor will be taken over, at least temporarily, by Hans Lange, his associate, now starting his seventh season with the orchestra.

Frederick August Stock was born in Julich, Germany, Nov. 11, 1872, the son of Frederick Carl and Maria Stock. His father was a bandmaster in the German army and it was from him that the boy had his first lessons in music.

At 14, he entered the Cologne conservatorium. Later he studied theory with Humperdinck, the composer of "Hansel and Gretel," and with Gustav Jensen and Franz Wüllner. He joined the Cologne orchestra as violinist, and in 1895 was brought to the United States by Theodore Thomas, conductor of the Chicago orchestra, which in 1912 became the Chicago Symphony orchestra.

When Stock arrived, he found the violin section filled. As there was an opening in the viola section and he needed a job, he said, "Then I will try to play the viola." He played it. In 1903 he became assistant conductor, taking over some of the out of town concerts.

Succeeds Thomas in 1905.

When Theodore Thomas died in 1905, certain Chicagoans were shocked that the trustees appointed the relatively unknown Frederick Stock as his successor; but Frederick Stock held that post, and held it with brilliance and increasing distinction for the rest of his life.

With one brief hiatus. During the first World war, some Chicagoans discovered that Mr. Stock had neglected to take out his final papers as an American citizen. As this made him, technically, an "enemy alien," he voluntarily resigned for the duration. He was absent from his post from October, 1918, until Feb. 28, 1919. Eric DeLamarter, then assistant conductor, took temporary charge.

A Lover of America.

What Frederick Stock said at that time is worth reprinting now: "I have come to love this as my native land, to cherish her institutions, to identify myself with her cause, and to regard myself as one of her dutiful and grateful sons. My devotion to and love for this country I count among the finest assets of my inner self. And so now, when most of all I wish to feel myself a part of this great republic in its struggle to make the world free from the menace of recurring wars, I find myself technically—almost, I would say, ironically—styled 'alien enemy'."

But that period passed and was forgotten. Frederick Stock grew in stature as the orchestra developed in splendor. He won honorary degrees from numerous universities, including Northwestern, Michigan, Cornell, and the University of Chicago. He was made a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor in 1925, and was general music director of A Century of Progress exposition in 1933.

Probably best known among his own compositions are his "Symphonic Waltz," written 35 years ago, and his concertos for violin and violoncello. He was widely known for his transcriptions for orchestra, notably Bach's "St. Anne's" prelude and fugue, Schumann's Third ["Rhenish"] symphony, and the Tschaikowsky trio, which he dedicated to the late Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Accepts Few Invitations.

As a conductor, Stock was generally listed with the big four in this country, the others being Arturo Toscanini, Serge Koussevitzky, and Leopold Stokowski. Faithful to his own orchestra, he accepted few invitations as guest conductor, but, when he took the Chicago Symphony on its golden jubilee tour in 1940-'41, both he and it were widely acclaimed as coming from the top rank.

Chicago needed no reassurance on this subject, but it was grateful just the same, to hear other cities echo its deep and lasting satisfaction in a great conductor who had created and sustained a great orchestra. What Chicago will do now that Frederick Stock has left his beloved city in the only way he would have consented to leave it—that is something Chicago is too deeply saddened to think about. But Chicago knows one irreparable fact: He cannot be replaced.

Musician Dies

(Story in adjoining column.)

[Monett Photo.]

Dr. Frederick Stock, director of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, who died yesterday, as he appeared in 1905 when he succeeded the late Theodore Thomas, a conductor of the Chicago Symphony.

SYMPHONY'S CONCERTS TO GO ON AS DR. STOCK WOULD HAVE WISHED

Frederick Stock's death will not change the plans for the Chicago Symphony orchestra's concerts of tomorrow evening and Friday afternoon. They will be conducted by Hans Lange, associate conductor, as was originally intended and as the conductor would have wished it.

The concerts scheduled for the week in which the late conductor's birthday falls—Nov. 11—will be devoted to memorial programs. The programs were to have consisted of works composed by the famous director who passed so suddenly.

FUND GETS FLOWER MONEY

Dr. Frederick Stock's family asked last night that friends not send flowers as a tribute to the celebrated conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. The relatives asked instead that the money which would be spent for flowers be forwarded to the Orchestral association for the Frederick Stock scholarship fund. This is a fund established by Mr. Stock a quarter of a century ago to help young musicians. Mr. Stock's family believes he would prefer that the generosity of those who knew him be directed to carrying on his work.

The pall bearers at the funeral tomorrow will be Walter Hancock, Arthur Hand, Franz Esser, Vaclav Jiskra, Hjalmar Rabe, Max Pottag, Gaston Du Moulin, and Paul Handke.

Honorary pall bearers will be:

Cuthbert C. Adams	Francis M. Knight
Cyrus H. Adams	Earl Kribben
Joseph Adamic	Hans Lange
Henry Bartholomay	Frank O. Lowden
Richard Bentley	Chauncey McCormick
Bruce Borland	Leeds Mitchell
Felix Borowski	Charles H. Morse
Daniel H. Burnham	Howell W. Murray
Arthur G. Cable	Francis Neilson
John Alden Carpenter	Ralph H. Norton
Alfred T. Carton	Eric Oldberg
William B. Cudahy	J. Sanford Otis
Paul H. Davis	Walter P. Paepcke
Edison Dick	Ralph H. Poole
Gaylord Donnelley	Theodore W. Robinson
Martin Dumler	Edward L. Ryerson
Percy B. Eckhart	Charles Ward Seabury
David Edgar	Durand Smith
Albert D. Farwell	Albert A. Sprague
Marshall Field	Edgar Stanton Jr.
Charles B. Goodspeed	Charles H. Swift
Harry S. Gradle	Robert J. Thorne
William B. Hale	Russell Tyson
Arthur B. Hall	Henry E. Voegeli
Chalkley J. Hambleton	John T. Welling
George Roberts Jones	Ernest B. Zeisler

The pall bearers are all members of the Symphony orchestra. The honorary pall bearers are leaders of Illinois music, business, and financial circles.

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Symphony Concert

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra presented the third regular concert of the 62d season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

"Island of the Dead," Op. 29 ..... Rachmaninoff
Suite from "Petrouchka" ..... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Op. 55 ..... Beethoven

If there was any impression in anyone's mind that Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead" might be (after all these years) quite as petrified as the melancholy precipices which evoked the image in the composer's mind, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra adjusted it yesterday afternoon with resounding dispatch. And then went on, let us forthwith add, to perform miracles with Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Beethoven's "Eroica," each in his own fashion.

There is one thing about Rachmaninoff which is quite indisputable: he is the most honest musician alive. That he has been quite left behind by the pack is common knowledge. It mustn't be forgotten, however, that that was the way he wanted it, for he early chose both his path and his gait. Thus he holds the singular position of being a contemporary 19th century composer with the added distinction of being an extremely good one.

His melodic ideas are often extraordinarily beautiful, his orchestral idiom is individual although typically romantic in conception, his rhythms are vigorous and inventive; yet over and above all that is the feeling in his music of the utmost sincerity. In short, he is making music for himself alone; if we happen to like it too, so much the better. If we do not, well, that is our loss.

It so happens that we do like "Island of the Dead" (almost as much as the Paganini Variations), not only because it is remarkably evocative of the anatomy of melancholy, but because it has a grave dignity and a passionate yet restrained approach to its subject matter, and because its musical means always remain in character. There are no "effects," nor any melodrama. Even the introduction of the Dies Irae, so obvious a gesture in most cases, is inevitably logical.

All these things aside, though, if the breath of life was ever granted a composition, it was done so yesterday by Dr. Koussevitzky in the performance. His conviction was contagious, driving the orchestra on to superb heights of tone production and sonority. Regrettably, the composition ends on too somber a note to bring the conductor all the honors entitled to him. "Petrouchka," however, does not, and Dr. Koussevitzky gained what he might have lost in the Rachmaninoff in the way of encouragement.

Stravinsky's delicious orchestral suite was just the proper catharsis after the Rachmaninoff, and that, too, was performed with extreme virtuosity. No one, certainly, need be told at this date what an enormously clever piece it is, nor what a fearful one to play with the necessary verve. Sanroma whirled through the glittering piano part with a wonderfully appropriate brittleness, while the various orchestral choirs accomplished Herculean difficulties with incredible zip. The concert ended with Beethoven's ever-fresh "Eroica," and merely to say that the entire audience remained throughout on so stuffy a day is to indicate the magnetic quality of the performance. In a word, it was a most satisfactory concert. Next week the program consists of Miaskovsky's 21st Symphony, Debussy's "Iberia" and Sibelius' Second Symphony.

SERGE RACHMANINOFF, famous Russian pianist, who gives his only recital of the season at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon.

SYMPHONY IN STOCK TRIBUTE

Dedicate Music to Memory of Chicago Conductor

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Dr. Koussevitzky's revival at this week's symphony concerts of Rachmaninoff's "The Island of the Dead," after the picture of Arnold Boecklin, served a three-fold purpose. The music itself, unheard in Symphony Hall since 1924, gave pleasure to many, if the word may properly be used in connection with music so solemnly impressive as this. Probably, however, the chief reason for its inclusion on the programme was the fact that Mr. Rachmaninoff, who plays in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, will be present at this evening's concert. And yet when the death of Frederick Stock, late conductor of the Chicago Symphony, prompted Dr. Koussevitzky to dedicate this programme to his colleague's memory, "Die Toteninsel" became forthwith a most appropriate opening number.

Nor was Rachmaninoff's symphonic poem the only work on the programme that was suited to this memorial intent. The third and last item, Beethoven's "Eroica," contains the greatest of symphonic funeral marches and the heroic character of the symphony was not unfitting where Dr. Stock was concerned, since in his own field he was nothing if not a doughty warrior.

When Mr. Rachmaninoff conducted "The Island of the Dead" in its Symphony Hall premiere, in December, 1909, the piece made a profound impression as did its composer, who also introduced to us on that occasion his Second Piano Concerto. Performances followed in 1910, '11, '15, '17, '21 and, as said above, '24 and some of those who heard the first one felt that none of its successors quite recaptured its mood. In short, it looked as though Mr. Rachmaninoff had written a piece that only he himself could properly interpret. It is hard to be definite and authoritative about such things, particularly where so great a lapse of time is involved, yet it seemed yesterday that Dr. Koussevitzky had come close to discovering the music's secret. Inevitably its dramatic climaxes depart widely from the suggestion of awful stillness, of unearthly quiet, that the picture itself must inevitably make upon all who see it. Only at the beginning and the end can the score recapture this particular atmosphere, but yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky succeeded in keeping these same climaxes from being too frenetic and flamboyant.

Possibly the occasion into which the concert so unexpectedly developed had a sobering effect on the conductor, who was more restrained than sometimes has been his wont with the "Eroica." Always with Beethoven, to be sure, he seems more concerned with the music's spirit than with its letter, and things happened yesterday that might well give a purist pause. Yet to carp about liberties taken with tempo and dynamics seems rather petty in view of the eloquence of the presentation as a whole. In particular, the Funeral March was nobly set forth. The performance, like the music itself, transcended the implications of the title. Between these two high points of the programme there came yesterday a brilliant version of the familiar suite from Stravinsky's ballet "Petrouchka," which still holds its place in the concert hall, in spite of the fact that much of it depends for its significance upon the action it was designed to accompany.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 25 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will give five pairs of concerts in Carnegie Hall this season. The opening pair is slated for Thursday night, Nov. 19, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 21. Remaining dates are Jan. 7 and 9, Feb. 12 and 13, March 11 and 13, and April 1 and 2.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

It Serge Koussevitzky continues the practice begun a week ago of reviving neglected music of the past, the current Boston Symphony season will have more diversified programs than has been the case in recent years. Last week it was excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet." Yesterday afternoon Mr. Kousseitzky performed for the first time since 1924 the symphonic poem "The Island of the Dead" by Rachmaninoff. Stravinsky's ballet suite "Petrouchka" took the space just before intermission, and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony brought the afternoon to a glowing conclusion.

This program was dedicated to the memory of Frederick Stock, who died last Tuesday and who had been conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra since 1905. Since the Bethoven Symphony was scheduled, no funerary music had to be added as a specific tribute to Mr. Stock. There could have been no more appropriate composition than the vast funeral march of the "Eroica," and the dedicatory aspect was further served by the work of Rachmaninoff.

One quite naturally thinks of the composer Rachmaninoff as a Romantic. The first two piano concertos, the Second Symphony and "The Island of the Dead" are in a romantic idiom involving large orchestra, richness of color and harmony and emotional melodies which have an especial intensity deriving no doubt from the composer's Slavic origin. Yet Rachmaninoff has never been cloying; a certain tartness has always distinguished his style, and in later music that element has been increasingly strong.

One had half expected, from insufficient thought about the matter, that "The Island of the Dead" might seem "dated." Nothing could be further from the truth. Music so fresh, so skillfully wrought and so evocative of a mood of gravity never "dates" even though it must be related to a definite period in the history of the art. The solemn atmosphere of Arnold Boecklin's once-famous painting, which inspired "The Island of the Dead," was completely absorbed into music. At the beginning and the end you find that unearthly stillness of Boecklin's volcanic isle, partly shrouded by cypresses and surrounded by water of earthly calm.

Those academically inclined may argue that "The Island of the Dead" is not "first-order" music. Perhaps it isn't. Who cares except historians? It remains engrossing and moving. The argument that older music of less than the rank of masterpiece (as W. S. Gilbert might have put it) should not be bothered with is plainly specious. We cannot live on tonal pheasant and wild rice all the time.

Perhaps Mr. Koussevitzky made a rare mistake of program selection by putting "Petrouchka" just after "The Island of the Dead." Even though both were beautifully performed the change of mood gave this reviewer quite a wrench. These superb readings were another testimony to the conductor's range of understanding, for he emphasized the almost heartless irony of "Petrouchka" and its folkish flavor as fully as he had communicated the solemnity of "The Island of the Dead."

After a beautifully balanced performance of the first movement of the "Eroica," the three following movements were in a way disappointing. There were moments of ragged execution and the first violins made a conspicuously poor entrance in a passage of the funeral march.

The program will be repeated at 8:15 tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the first Boston performance of Miaskovsky's Symphony No. 21, "Iberia" by Debussy and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.—C. W. D.

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SYMPHONY HALL

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday evening series of concerts at Symphony Hall last evening. The works played were the shining Symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, and the vast and disputed Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

The Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch is a product of the most tmultuous times this worn and wretched world has ever known. There are associations which hardly can be divorced in consideration of the work, and the very circumstances of its creation and performance are enough to thwart the objective approach. And yet, who wants to approach music objectively, for is not most of it received and weighed by the emotions?

On repeated hearing one's personal reactions to the Seventh Symphony become cooler. One of the most striking characteristics of Shostakovitch's music is the forthright simplicity of his melodic invention. And this is nowhere more apparent than in the charming and almost naive tunes of the Seventh Symphony. Perhaps this, and their frequent repetition, almost unadorned, accounts for their lack of staying power.

To one listener, at least, the Seventh Symphony sometimes rings hollow. The bombast, the inordinate length and the thinness of its content prevent it from settling permanently in the mind.

The performances last evening were oddly uneven. Mr. Koussevitzky took the Haydn Symphony at a fast clip that rather obscured its lovely details. And yet, there were moments of shimmering, crystal beauty. The Shostakovitch, on the other hand, was played almost wholly with fervor and sincerity. Its execution was an example of superb generalship.

The concert will be repeated this afternoon at 3.—J. W. R.

MUSIC

Monday Concert

The first subsidiary concert of the season was given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The program was as follows.

Symphony in G major, No. 88 (B. & H. No. 13) — Haydn
Symphony No. 7, Op. 60 — Shostakovitch

Dr. Koussevitzky last night gave Boston another chance to hear the controversial new symphony of Shostakovitch, in a performance that left the rafters rocking once more. Upon a fourth hearing, (there have been two radio broadcasts in addition to the Boston performances) the work almost takes on the shape of a nodding acquaintance. The climaxes lose some of their terrifying qualities and the melodic line does not seem as strange, but none of the power is gone from the magnificent crescendos.

The work will undoubtedly be the storm center of discussion in musical drawing rooms all over the country this season, and perhaps for more to come. There is no denying the emotional impact of the first and last movements, although it seems that wise condensation of the crescendo in the first might be an improvement. The audience, however, signified its approval by bursting into applause at the close of the first movement, something a Boston audience does very rarely.

The concert opened with a splendid reading of Haydn's delightful G major symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky so obviously loves the works of the early symphonists that it seems that he almost caresses the music from the orchestra. Nowhere does the perfection of the Boston orchestra's strings show up better than in the works of Haydn and Mozart. The attack, the pianissimos and the crescendos were done beautifully in last night's performance. Here is an exquisite work that never loses its savor. Whether the newer work on the program will last nearly as well is a question which only time will tell. The program will be repeated this afternoon at three o'clock.

D. W. S.

Monday Symphonies Begin

Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 7, op. 60, presented last night in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, before the subscribers of the Monday series of concerts, may be taken for just another big piece of instrumental music, or it may be taken as the expression of the thought of its composer, of his nation, or of the whole modern world. As a piece of music, a grand construction in tone, it has already been considerably discussed and a variety of expert and experienced comment has been published about it. With time, there will be more of that, if the work survives and continues to be performed, and no doubt much of the opinion will be verified and accepted, while some will be disputed and even disproved.

Technical considerations are important, too; for no music pulls through and achieves permanent regard unless it shows the hand of a master-builder and the design of an original thinker. But to let concern for the symphony as a mechanism go for the moment, what does it seem to say? No doubt there is a message in it which reaches everybody, if words could be found to tell what. Again, time will probably make a revelation of the matter, and while we are waiting all we can do is to speak out, each of us who listens, our own particular notior..

For one point, the symphony appears like something pretty serious. It is no frivolous modern stuff devised to cause wonder. If serious, may it not be fairly equivalent to something religious? As Russian music, it would be strange if it escaped the liturgical influence under which all Russians come if they lend any ear at all to their national inheritance in tone. The first movement with the short theme repeated measure after measure, the theme with a feminine cadence, only now and then replied to by a masculine one, what is it but the supplication of a litany? Somebody may call the brief reiterated strain a shout of victory; but why not the familiar Russian "Lord, have mercy"?

Oh, a person conversant with the popular poets of 1917 may interpose, the theme is nothing but a reminiscence of the Bolshevik marching songs. Objection well taken. Perhaps the over-and-over-again exclamation of the crescendo episode, already made famous by the critics, may be so accounted for.

The Seventh Symphony amounts, however, to more than an echoing cry; it is a cyclic work in four movements, written with all formal respect for classical usage. The second movement possesses a quality of humor, the third goes in plentifully for sentiment, and the fourth manages to impose a climax on top of the one already attained in the first. Affairs are well proportioned; there must be length in the last three divisions to make proper balance with the long first. Shostakovitch knows when to keep on and he knows when to stop. He sets out to do something in a big form and he controls his form, first note to last.

The Monday hearers gave keen attention and warm approval to the symphony, the masterful conducting and playing of which must long remain in memory with them. Set off against Shostakovitch was Haydn (Symphony in G major, No. 88, the one with the Largo reminding us of Gluck).

Rally to Aid Symphony

Mrs. S. Eliot Guild, Jr., Mrs. Ralph Hornblower, Mrs. Henry P. King and Mrs. Francis Sears are among Boston's leading music patrons serving on the finance committee now being formed to raise funds for covering expenses of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for last season and this.

Other members of the committee to date include Mrs. William Stanley Parker, Jerome D. Greene, president of the trustees of the orchestra; Charles Watkins, executive vice-chairman; Charles Sumner Bird, Edward Ballantine, Roger Converse, Alvan T. Fuller, Seth T. Gano, George C. Greener, James C. Howe, Carl T. Keller, Dr. Robert L. DeNormandie, Hugh Nawn, Dr. Leroy M. S. Miner, Alan Steinert, Edward A. Taft, John A. Tuckerman and Roger Wolcott.

Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are making a concerted effort to secure a membership of 3000 to help the orchestra in times of emergency.

NEW WORK BY SYMPHONY

Miaskovsky's 21st Given First Performance

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Concert programmes, like politics, sometimes make strange bedfellows. On that of this week's Symphony Concerts there are represented, each by a symphony, a Finn and a Russian, Sibelius and Miaskovsky. Yet if these gentlemen found themselves on opposite sides of a fence, they would feel perfectly justified in taking pot shots at each other. Moreover, another Russian, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, interpreted the two with equal ardor and conviction. And all this is just as it should be: we must keep the war out of music.

Miaskovsky's Symphony, his 21st, in one movement, received yesterday its first concert performance in the United States. And while 21 symphonies seem like quite a lot for this day and generation, we must realize that this 60-year-old Soviet composer has written two since this was produced in Moscow in 1940. If Miaskovsky's fecundity reminds us of the 18th century, his music, or what little of it has been heard hereabouts, savors of the 19th.

This 21st Symphony is a wholly agreeable and ingratiating work. In style it seems more German than Russian. More than once you are reminded of Strauss in his lyrico-polyphonic moods. The music is well put together, the interest is well maintained, the orchestration is that of a practiced hand—and no wonder. Indeed, the piece is so short and withal so consistently pleasing, even heart-warming, that this listener would have gladly heard it right over again. The audience liked it, too, well enough to recall Dr. Koussevitzky to the stage. Granted that Miaskovsky may have no strong physiognomy as composer, is it not still possible that we should know more of him than we do?

Yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky made his third notable revival of the season, adding to Belioz's "Romeo and Juliet" and Rachmaninoff's "The Island of the Dead," the "Iberia" of Debussy. Probably no one has ever maintained that "Iberia" was superior to "The Afternoon of a Faun," the Nocturnes and "The Sea," but these are with us always and this second of the three "Images" had not been heard in Symphony Hall since 1929. While their Spanishry is anything but the conventional, stereotyped article, the first and third divisions are both less distinguished and less evocative than the second, "The Fragrance of the Night," which is the quintessence of musical impressionism. Yesterday's performance of the whole suite was a joy.

The Sibelius Symphony was that prime favorite of Dr. Koussevitzky and his public, the Second. Some of us who are beginning to be disenchanted with "that overstuffed bard," to use Paul Rosenfeld's caustic phrase, are also beginning to find the more obvious parts of the first two symphonies rather hard to take. Yet when, in the subsequent ones, the composer purged himself of his Tchaikovskian dross, what remains does not add up to a great deal. Yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky made the inevitable effect with the finale and he brought eloquence of a quite different sort to the elegiac Andante, which now seems far and away the finest movement of the four.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony concert-goers are offered something rare if not choice, this week—a Symphony by the Russian Nicolas Miaskovosky. The work is the 21st among his 23 symphonic progeny, and these performances are the first in Boston as well as the first in an American concert hall. The American premiere took the form of a radio broadcast, last August. Mr. Koussevitzky also conducts, this week, Debussy's "Iberia" and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

Taking a rather light view, Miaskovsky's 21st Symphony reminds one of Portia's conversation with Nerissa on the subject of Portia's gentlemen friends. That lady, who knew her own mind, said of the young English baron, Falconbridge: "How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany and his behavior everywhere."

In spite of technical skill, solid counterpoint, structural logic and some very nice orchestral tints, the Miaskowsky Symphony is oddly suited, and might have been put put together from suggestions by Bruckner, Debussy, Richard Strauss, Tchaikovsky and Hindemith. At least it is possible to discern little reminiscences of each of them.

At the same time, one can sense Miaskovsky's own individuality amid the prevailing 19th Century aspect of the one-movement score. The general style is that of an elder musician; there are no excesses, all is compact and trim, the orchestra is large but not swollen. Just how much of an electic Miaskovsky may be is not possible to judge. Reminiscence hunting is a pleasurable sport, and a safer one than elephant hunting, but it proves nothing. But to call this 21st Symphony either modern or original would be far to leeward of the truth.

How good it was to hear "Iberia," which has unaccountably been missing from Symphony programs since 1929! This second of Debussy's orchestral "Images" is a curious work, belonging probably to the beginning of the French sensualist's creative decline. It, too, contains reminiscences, not of other composers, but of Debussy's own earlier music. His "Festivals" of the 1890s furnished something to "The morning of a fete day," a little to the Spanish streets and byways of "Iberia." And "The fragrance of the night" might be the evening engagement of Debussy's faun following his interesting afternoon.

Even though it calls up stronger music of Debussy's creative prime, "Iberia" is still a tissue of magically colored and endlessly charming sound. And it, in turn, must have inspired Ravel when that orchestral conjurer sat down to pen his "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet.

Yesterday afternoon the Boston Symphony played as 110 virtuosi, and Mr. Koussevitzky surpassed himself with the authority, the color, delicacy and imagination of his readings of Miaskovsky and "Iberia." Finer orchestral performance is neither desirable nor possible.

It was the same story with the Sibelius Second, music which apparently stirs the conductor as it unfolds. Once again the four movements were an emotional crescendo culminating in a finale of almost orgiastic intensity and, tonally, of sheer magnificence.

At 8:15 tonight the program will be repeated. Next week Richard Burgin will conduct Lopatnikoff's Sinfonietta. Op. 27 (new to Boston), Mahler's First Symphony, and three pieces in which Kerstin Thorborg will be contralto soloist: Bizet's so-called "Agnus Dei", Wagner's "Dreams" and Schubert's "The Almighty."

C. W. D.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
NOV 8 - 1942

KOUSSEVITZKY HAILS SOVIET

BOSTON, Nov. 7 (AP)—Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced today that he would join in a salute to Russia tomorrow on the 25th anniversary of the October Revolution.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
NOV 1 - 1942

Orchestra Will Give Concert for Service Men

Boston, Oct. 31.—(AP)—A special performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra "for our armed forces"—open to all uniformed men and women in war service free of charge—will be given at Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, December 20, orchestra officials announced tonight.

Each of the uniformed men and women may invite a civilian.

It will be the first of a series of such concerts with the full orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and, in addition, groups from the orchestra under the direction of Richard Burgin and Arthur Fiedler have volunteered to perform at each of the army camps of Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
NOV 1 - 1942

Symphony to Present Free Concerts Open To People in Uniform

Boston, Oct. 31.(AP)—A special performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra "for our armed forces"—open to all uniformed men and women in war service free of charge—will be given at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 20, orchestra officials announced tonight.

Each of the uniformed men and women may invite a civilian friend.

It will be the first of a series of such concerts with the full orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and, in addition, groups from the orchestra under the direction of Richard Burgin and Arthur Fiedler have volunteered to perform at each of the Army camps of Massachusetts.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
NOV 9 - 1942

140

Dr. Koussevitzky Conducting —

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is sketched by Miss Martha Burnham, artist, as he puts the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through their paces during rehearsal time in Symphony Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky will bring his men to Hartford twice this season in the Bushnell Symphony Series, the first concert taking place on Nov. 17 at Bushnell Memorial.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LANCASTER, PA.
SUNDAY NEWS
NOV 1 - 1942

This Clipping From CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

This Clipping From GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS
NOV 10 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
NOV 16 1942

Symphony Hits New 'Low' With Clarinet

Boston—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest tone is equivalent to the lowest A-flat on a piano.

Rosario Mazzeo bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer.

This Clipping From YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
NOV 1 - 1942

This Clipping From TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
NOV 1942

This Clipping From LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.
STAR-JOURNAL
NOV 2 - 1942

This Clipping From McKEESPORT, PA.
NEWS
NOV 2 - 1942

This Clipping From WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS SUN
NOV 1942

This Clipping From BRENHAM, TEXAS BANNER-PRESS

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOVELAND, COLO.
REPORTER HERALI
NOV

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
NOV 4 - 1942

This Clipping From GREENVILLE, OHIO
ADVOCATE
NOV 4 1942

This Clipping From WEIRTON, W. VA.
TIMES
NOV 4

This Clipping From ELYRIA, O.
CHRONICLE TELEGRAM
NOV 5 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM EXCELSIOR SPRINGS, MO.
STANDARD

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
NOV 5 - 1942

This Clipping From BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE
NOV 5 - 1942

This Clipping From CANTON, OHIO REPOSITORY
NOV 6 - 1942

This Clipping From PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
NOV 6 - 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
CITIZEN
NOV 6 - 1942

This Clipping From BELOIT, WIS.
NEWS

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
NOV 6 - 1942

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

This Clipping From ASHEVILLE, N. C.
CITIZEN
NOV 9 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
NOV 9 - 1942

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
NOV 10 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
STATESMAN
NOV 12 1942

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
NOV 16 1942

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION
NOV 29 1942

This Clipping From Forrest City, Ark.
Times-Herald
NOV 30 1942

Shostakovitch Tells How 7th Symphony Was Created

Dmitri Shostakovich, whose famous Seventh Symphony will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Bushnell Memorial Tuesday evening, has given the following account of how the work came to be written:

"On that peaceful summer morning of June 22, 1941, I was on my way to the Leningrad Stadium to see my favorite Sunday soccer game. Molotov's radio address found me hurrying down the street for fear I should miss opening quarter. And so our happy and fruitfully constructive existence was rudely shattered. Yet the last twelve months have been the fullest year of my life.

Peacetime plans, the manuscript of a symphonic work I had just started—all these things I put aside to start on an entirely new epoch of life and work. Vacation begins on July 1 at the Leningrad Conservatory where I was head of the pianoforte department and of the examinations committee. But this was no usual vacation time. Students and professors all stayed to form a local air raid defense group. I served as a fire-fighter, and since I had to be on call most of the time, moved over near the Conservatory, where I lived under barracks conditions. I had already applied for volunteer service, but though my application was accepted, I wasn't called for duty.

Instead, I was asked to work with the people's Voluntary Army Theater as head of the musical department. We toured countless front-line regiments aboard a truck which carried the whole troupe. Our repertory consisted of war and satirical sketches for which I composed songs and ditties. The most popular among Red Army men was a jolly operetta called 'Conference of German Diplomats.'

Began in July

"This was during July and August. Meanwhile in the first hot July days, I started work on my seventh symphony, conceived as a broad musical embodiment of majestic ideas of the patriotic war.

"The work engrossed me wholly. Nothing could hinder the flow of ideas—neither savage raids, German planes, nor the grim atmosphere of a beleaguered city. I worked with an inhuman intensity I have never reached before. I could stop to compose small pieces, marches, film pieces and songs; attend to my organizational duties as chairman of the Leningrad Composers' Association, and return to my symphony as though I had never before left it.

"By October 1, when I left Leningrad for Moscow, I had already completed three movements and most of the fourth. I finished the symphony in Kuibyshev a few months later. The first performance was given there on March 5, 1942. Soon after, I helped with rehearsals for its performance in Moscow.

Scores Sent to U. S.

"Shortly after the first performance of my symphony in Kuibyshev, I learned that it had aroused the interest of many eminent conductors in America, Great Britain and South America. As soon as it was possible, scores and parts were forwarded to Koussevitzky, Toscanini, Stokowski, Ormandy and Chavez, to name a few. Just today, I heard that the scores, photographed on micro-film for easier transportation, had been safely received in America. I hope, and believe, that its first American performance will be for the benefit of Russian War Relief, which is doing so many fine things for my people.

"Of course, I am gratified as a musician that my work should evoke so much interest. But I am particularly gratified as a citizen. I would like to have my symphony heard in all the United Nations as a symbol of friendship between our countries; as a symbol that we are brothers in arms, in culture, and in fraternity in the struggle for a better world.

"The work on the seventh symphony was the very pivot of all my creative efforts during this first year of the war. So much so that when it was finished I found it difficult at first to begin on something else.

"My work is wholly at the service of my country, and everything I conceive now is inspired by the magnificent spirt of our people in this war. I could no more separate it from myself than I could stop composing. I am working daily and fruitfully at a new work, but it is too soon to speak of it. I can only say my plans are extensive and serious."

New Values

Serge Koussevitzky gave the first concert hall performance of this symphony in America when he conducted it last summer at Tanglewood with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. On that occasion he made this statement:

"'The darker the night, the brighter the stars.'

"In the epoch of destruction and world tragedy values are being created which are firm and stable, and part of a supreme and lasting order. In the country where the invading barbarian is inflicting destruction, amid the smoking ruins of peaceful life, one of the greatest creations of musical art has been born.

"It is the good fortune of the creator to be able to comprehend his native land—to express its living cultural strength. Only on the soil of cultural consciousness can folk are live, and alongside the external struggle and destruction create new, powerful cultural values.

"Shostakovitch is the bright torch of the Russian people and its creative forces—inexhaustible as the earth itself. That is why his music is so overwhelming and human and can be compared with the universality and humanism of Beethoven's genius, which, like that of Shostakovitch, was born in an epoch of world-shattering events. His esthetics may be considered equal to the esthetics of Beethoven.

"Having an exceptionally wide scope and freedom of form, which in the Seventh Symphony take on grandiose proportions, Shostakovitch never loses the feeling of measure, line and unity. His symphony is as solid as granite. In it we see the freedom of the master who has subordinated his instrument to his craftsmanship. In his hand the unyielding granite is sculptured like pliable wax.

"For the performance of such a symphony as the Shostakovitch Seventh, at a moment when the life and future of the cultural world are being decided on the battlefields of the suffering Russian land, an inner unity is necessary. Those who perform it must comprehend the four dimensions—height, length, breadth and depth—of the creating genius of Shostakovitch.

"His music flows from the heart of the creator to the heart of the listener. In this is his simplicity, and in this is his wisdom."

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
NOV 16 1942

MUSIC

Opera Tradition Comes to Hartford

By Carl E. Lindstrom

A battle royal could be started among critics, talent scouts and impresarios by asking who discovered this or that star of the musical firmament. They all have discoveries to their credit, of course, but none of them could claim Enrico Caruso, Fritz Kreisler, Galli-Curci, Heifetz or Alfred Cortot, to name only a few of those whose initial fame must be credited to the phonograph disc.

A scout whose travels took him farther than any opera agent and one whose career covers the development of recorded music from its infancy has committed his experience to paper in "The Music Goes Round" (Macmillan; $3.00.) This is by F. W. Gaisberg, collaborator with Emile Berliner and other pioneers in the field and long time business and artistic factotum for H. M. V. (His Master's Voice.)

Mr. Gaisberg was in the thick of things from the time that the instrument was a mere toy exhibited at county fairs. Bankers and promotors could not see its possibilities as a music reproducer. They all felt that if a talking doll could be developed, that would be something! It was when the author chanced upon a newspaper advertisement for a clock work motor to be attached to a sewing machine that his curiosity led him to hunt up the inventor. The motor was much too large and cumbersome but the main principles eventually led to a spring motor which for many years provided power for all sound reproducers.

* * *

ANECDOTES about musical artists are no new thing under the sun. Being temperamentally and socially what they are, artists occasion more yarns than the ordinary run of mortals. Most of the stories we have come to us from other artists, however, and are likely to be colored by jealousy, prejudice or emotional partisanship.

Experience teaches that it is best to put a heavy discount on any anecdote that one prima donna tells about another. But in this book we have an observer, who while he has artistic sensibilities, is primarily a scientist and business man. Mr. Gaisberg had to deal objectively with his clients and when he tells you a yarn about Rachmaninoff, Flagstad, Grace Moore or Battistini, it sounds like authentic reporting.

"The Music Goes Round" is packed full of delightful, personal reminiscence. The whole world was his field. In early phonograph days, he went to India, where he made some 600 recordings by the leading native singers and instrumentalists; to China, where he made as many more; to Japan, where through the imitative instincts of that people and the virtues of the phonograph a big market developed.

Mr. Gaisberg reports that 100,000 recordings of Beethoven symphonies were bought by Jap enthusiasts. "Since 1936 two record selling society schemes have been flourishing in Japan, known as 'Gems from the Great Masters' and the 'Record Lovers' Society.' Each has over twenty thousand subscribers pledged to buy each month the record chosen by a selection committee."

The Japs have no music of their own.

* * *

IT appears the world's most popular record was neither a symphony nor the "Beer Barrel Polka" but "The Laughing Song," which was simply a recording of the boisterous laugh of Bert Sheppard. "In India alone over half a million records of the latter were sold. In the bazars of India I have seen dozens of natives seated on their haunches round a gramophone, rocking with laughter, whilst playing Sheppard's laughing record."

There are interesting word pictures of our own Rosa Ponselle, Richard Strauss, Sir Edgar Elgar, the Menuhin family, Bruno Walter, Feodor Chaliapin, a new account of the Melchior-Flagstad feud; interesting sidelights on Koussevitzky and his career: Barbirolli, Horowitz, Heifetz and Kreisler.

As an example of the kind of company Mr. Gaisberg kept, an account of a transAtlantic voyage on the S. S. Adriatic in 1921 is given when H. G. Wells, Chaliapin, Richard Strauss, Lucrezia Bori and Elisabeth Schumann whiled away the time in poker games and concerts, the party being joined at times by Colonel Repington and Peggy Hopkins Joyce.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
NOV 19 1942

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY PROVES DELIGHT DESPITE BIG ODDS

Against the odds of a sudden blackout during the program, Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an inspiring concert last night at Woolsey Hall. The orchestra had finished Smetana's overture to the "Bartered Bride" which re-lived under the clear delineation of Koussevitzky's direction the festive atmosphere of a genuine Czech scene. It was at the end of the second movement of the thrilling first New Haven performance of Martinu's First Symphony, that the hall was plunged into complete darkness for a period of time long enough to deter the orchestra from finishing the Symphony.

Particularly since this is a new symphony only two Boston performances old, the omission was regretted by both the orchestra and the audience. However, Koussevitzky promised in an announcement to the audience that the orchestra would repeat the symphony in its next concert at New Haven, and that he would invite Mr. Martinu to attend that concert too, as he had this concert. Mr. Martinu arose to receive the ovation from the audience who acclaimed him as though to promise faithful interest next time to hear the whole work.

As much as was heard last night indicated that the Symphony is of delightful lyric inspiration coupled with brisk rhythm. The first movement, the Moderato: poco piu mosso, scents of the French impressionistic school with its light chromatic passage played by the woodwinds. Against this fluid harmony Martinu has placed the strings, often in clear diatonic melodies. The two forces intermingle and alternate, build up in sincere full surges and finally, the movement ends with a clarity which reminds one of calm blue seas in the sunshine.

The scherzo, of a very vivicious nature had a dancing theme played clearly and neatly by the piano, which is incorporated in the score. The complexity and volume of the string section contrast with both of the trios which are charming soft themes played by the woodwinds.

It is remarkable that the Symphony should combine so much vitality with long pianissimo sections and still remain firmly masculine and in good taste. Yet Martinu has accomplished this end, never slumping into the saccharine style of a Debussy. One can attribute this quality to the Czech background of Martinu who prefers well-ordered beauty based on great simple truths to either sentimentality or frankly bolsterous screeching.

Until the next trip of the Boston Symphony to New Haven, our concert-goers will have to rest on the words of Dr. Koussevitzky, who said to your music critic before the concert, that the whole Symphony, and especially the third movement, is "some of the most beautiful music I have ever heard." His confidence in this work which was dedicated to the memory of Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky makes one surely realize the significance of Martinu's Symphony.

After the lights were again turned on, the orchestra gave a performance of Beethoven's Eroica which will long remain in mind. The deep understanding of the moods of the symphony was the salient point in this rendition. The horns did an especially good job in the technically difficult hunting-calls of the third movement. The last movement was interpreted with perhaps more rhythmic freedom than is ordinarily the case as in the pause before the sforzando chords separating the phrases. The tender lyrical theme of the first movement, the second theme of the second movement; the unflinching sternness of the marcia funebre; the heavy peasant shoe dance of the scherzo; and the highly amusing main theme of the Finale—all these were played with a proficiency which demonstrates the rigidity of discipline and the congeniality of the members of the orchestra under their vigorous conductor.

M. F.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
NOV 19 1942

MUSIC NOTES

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Shostakovich's Seventh symphony at tonight's concert in Carnegie Hall. Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, will precede it.

Lectures today: "Shostakovich: Symphony No. 5," Marion Rous, Carnegie Hall Art Gallery, 11 A. M.; "The Music Teacher's Role in the War Effort," Mrs. Harriet Seymour and Miss Eloise Piersall, Brooklyn Music Teachers Guild, Brooklyn Academy of Music, 10:30 A. M.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
NOV 18 1942

Boston Symphony in Fine Program Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in Woolsey Hall this evening, the event marking the second offering of the current Woolsey Hall Concert Series. The concert will begin at 8:30 and one of the finest symphonic programs ever presented in this city will be performed. The opening selection will be Smetana's beautiful Overture to "The Bartered Bride", following which will be played a new symphony, the No. 1 of the distinguished Czech composer, Bohuslaw Martinu. The third and concluding work will be the Beethoven Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major, "Eroica".

Particular interest centers in the Martinu work, composed last summer on commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., and dedicated to the memory of Mme. Koussevitzky. The piece was given its first performances anywhere in Boston last week-end, and met with great success among music lovers and reviewers alike. To quote the critic of the Boston Herald, "the work is one of the very few modern compositions which truly deserves the appellation of Symphony."

The balance of the Woolsey Series is as follows: December 8, National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, D. C., conducted by Hans Kindler and having Eugene List, pianist, as soloist; January 19, Lily Pons, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera; February 10, Albert Spalding, violinist; February 24, Vronsky and Babin, duo-pianists; March 10, Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nelson Eddy will appear in a special concert on March 31.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
NOV 18 1942

Shostakovitch Seventh Opens Bushnell Series

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

There were a good many uniforms and very few white ties at the opening of the Bushnell Memorial symphonic season last night, but in place of the indifference and preoccupation that seemed to characterize musical affairs in the early war months were to be noted a feeling of intentness and sobered appreciation of cultural life.

This engrossment may well be credited to Dr. Koussevitzky, who was at the peak of sensitivity and projective power. That the Boston Orchestra is a superb reflector of its leader's dynamism goes without saying. The two are one incalculable, compelling artistic organism.

Their persuasive faculties were enlisted in a challenging task, for the sensational Seventh Symphony of Shostakovitch which since last summer has been the subject of so much reclame and which every important conductor has felt called upon to interpret, was the evening's chief business.

None has a better right to it than Koussevitzky for actually he saw it first. He was beaten to it on the radio, but that and other details of its meteoric arrival have been in the picture magazines and are rather tiresome history now.

Brilliant Interpretation

To have merely heard this huge symphony on the radio is not to have heard it at all. The air channels give but a faint notion of its dynamic proportions, its subtleties of timbre, its extravagances. It is not only very long; it is very big. It could also be very dull but that cannot in truth describe last night's brilliant, emotionally freighted interpretation. There are, of course, a great many pages of pretty clayey stuff which no alchemy is capable of transmuting. Throughout its hour and thirteen minutes of duration, though, excitement—and a nobler word will scarcely do—was well sustained. It was listened to respectfully, responsively, dutifully. There was a spontaneous burst of applause after the first movement; there was an ovation for men and leader at the close.

"There can be no music without an ideology," Shostakovitch once said. "The old composers, whether they knew it or not, were upholding a political theory. Most of them, of course, were bolstering the rule of the upper classes."

The young Russian composer doubtless believes that he has always been true to that principle but he is an artist of very uneven creative power and it is significant that those concepts of his which have been the most ideological have proved the least successful even among their partisans. His Second Symphony, dedicated to the October Revolution and his Third, subtitled "May Day," are no longer listened to even in Russia. His First Symphony, which never was troubled by politics, has friends the world over because it is a winsome piece of art. The Fifth and Sixth are making their way slowly but surely without the benefit of ideological aids. There is nothing offensive about Shostakovitch's theory; it just doesn't apply even to his own works.

Other War Symphonies

The force of circumstance is quite another matter. On Nov. 20, 1940, Serge Koussevitzky opened a Bushnell symphonic season with Vaughan Williams' "A London Symphony" and received the most rapt attention that probably has ever been accorded that work, for the obvious reason that the heart of the world was then inflamed over the punishment the British capital was receiving. On Jan. 10, 1940, Dr. Koussevitzky programmed the Second Symphony of Sibelius while the saga which was being written around forest-rimmed Ladoga gripped civilized minds everywhere.

This is merely the outward testimonial to the profound dramatic instincts of the peerless conjurer from Symphony Hall. Every listener in the Bushnell Memorial was fighting the battle of Leningrad during the unfolding of this symphony. And so it had grandeur, fervor, heroism, majesty—but the concert should properly have been reviewed by a Hanson Baldwin.

It is better not to set up an artistic criterion for a work of this kind. That is to spoil the pleasure and the profit. It is a compelling document, a great piece of reporting, an ably argued thesis; it is not a great art work. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was never used as a model in English composition classes but that is nothing against it. Under different circumstances Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony might be found merely long and noisy.

Extended parts of it, as in the third movement, can be accepted for a sustained, eloquent lyricism; the second, Moderato poco allegretto, has an appealing naivete, an ingenuousness of expression that will not be denied; the opening statement with its bold unisons and a free, long-limbed melodic stride is a declaration worthy of the avowed subject, an arresting prospectus.

Some Faults Evident

There are faults in the composition that are intensely annoying and it is to be feared that they will result in the premature laying away of this gargantuan canvas. To call the middle section of the first movement derivative is to employ a euphemism. It is an unmitigated plagiarism from the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, note for note and with rhythmic exactitude. Even the coincidental use of Ravel's "Bolero" technique does not disguise the Russian's debt to his neighbor. Your reviewer will not quarrel with anyone over one composer's theft of material from another; there are too many cases of that to make another one important. What makes this one unacceptable is the fact that Shostakovitch, once the stuff was in his hands, did not do nearly as interesting things with it as did Sibelius and Ravel.

Koussevitzky may or may not have an implicit faith in every page of this symphony; his conscientiousness, however, was unfaltering. He accented heavily its dramatic burden, this not so much by an over-all design as by shrewd detailing, orgiastic climaxes and the vivid definition of contrasting material. I do not believe this symphony could have a better advocate than Serge Koussevitzky.

More space should have been saved for the G major Symphony, No. 88 in which Haydn unwittingly bolstered "the rule of the upper classes." Although he wrote more than a hundred that are now known to us, this one keeps coming up in Koussevitzky's programs. He is easily forgiven, however, for incredible as it may seem the Boston leader uncovers new beauties in it each time. It throbbed with a dewy, quiet joy in life; nor could the ardors of Shostakovitch quite erase the recollection of its sweetness.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
NOV 20 1942

Blackout Halts Symphony Concert.

New Haven, Nov. 19.—(AP.)—An audience estimated at 2000 sat in silence for about 40 minutes last night, part of the time in pitch darkness, when a blackout alarm sounded at Yale's Woolsey Hall during a program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The orchestra was in the middle of Martinu Symphony No. 1 when all the lights went out. An emergency dim lighting system apparently failed to work for at least 10 minutes but an usher with a flashlight asked from the platform that the audience keep calm. After a while the dim lights were turned on but they were not bright enough to permit continuation of the program until after the all clear sou[illegible]

This Clipping From TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
NOV 19 19[illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
NOV 19 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
NOV 20 1942

Shostakovich 7th Played at Carnegie Hall

Last evening the Boston Symphony gave the first of its annual series of concerts in Carnegie Hall and following the fashion of the day featured the muchly-discussed Seventh Symphony of Shostakovich.

The customary capacity audience greeted the visitors and after the orchestra's performance of Haydn's beguiling G Major Symphony eagerly anticipated the Russian work that had already moved concert patrons to acrid pro and con argument.

Conductor Serge Koussevitsky directed with the score (Arturo Toscanini at the initial concert performance in this city conducted without notes).

It may be that the musical imitation of the sounds of modern warfare, according to the young Soviet composer, may, after the passage of time, greet the ears with a diminution of din and violence that is the case at present.

To be sure, Shostakovich's Seventh has moments of lyrical beauty but these are few are far between and separated by many pages of violent, ear-splitting tone combinations and numerous redundant passages, all of which, even when performed by so excellent a band as the Bostonians and under the musicianly guidance of Maestro Koussevitzky, still remain a difficult and disturbing work to enjoy. GRENA BENNETT.

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 21 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY—Koussevitzky conducting: Carnegie Hall, Thurs., Nov. 19, at 8:45 P.M., and Sat., Nov. 21, at 2:30 P.M. . . . Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. (ST 3-6700), Fri., Nov. 20, at 8:30 P.M.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
NOV 23 1942

Themes and Variations

By HENRY SIMON

Musical Diary

Friday, Nov. 20—At Town Hall, Celius Dougherty and Vincenz Ruzicka played the premiere of a two-piano sonata by Paul Hindemith, which started with a most engaging and original first movement, with chime effects, and from there on became dry, academic, learned dissonance, such as only Hindemith can write. Maybe it's the effect of all those books full of footnotes at Yale, where Hindemith now is a professor.

The sonata and the rest of the varied program went with the customary Dougherty-and-Ruzicka tidiness and fine teamwork. Both gentlemen are leaving to join the Army shortly, but I couldn't detect any signs of feeling about the impending break-up of this successful team

° ° °

Saturday—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony played the premiere of Bohuslav Martinu's First Symphony at Carnegie Hall. It is the first commissioned work of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and the other composers commissioned so far (mostly Americans) have a high standard set for them. It's "absolute" music, with no discernible program, and easy listening all the way through. Based on an extremely simple theme that appears in all four movements and isn't much more in its unadorned form than one note followed by the next above it, the whole is worked out with stunning orchestral virtuosity and variety. Much of Martinu's earlier work is strongly Czechish in character. The Symphony has, if anything, an American tinge from several passages of jazzy syncopation.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NOV 22 1942

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The program follows:
Symphony No. 1 (first performance), Martinu
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".....Beethoven

Smetana's Heir

WHAT a pleasure! What a pleasure to hear the Boston Symphony again! Yesterday afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall was substantial and delicious, with two symphonies for fare, an old and a new, the Beethoven "Eroica" and a First by the brilliant Czechish composer, Bohuslav Martinu. The music was fine and the renditions couldn't have been more elegant. Just think of it! An ensemble that sounds like an ensemble playing music that sounds like music! It restores one's faith; it really does.

* * *

The Martinu Symphony is a beaut. It is wholly lovely and doesn't sound like anything else. Original is not the word for it, because the thematic material is not quite that. The best of this, moreover, is folklorish in the good Czech tradition. The harmonic underpinning is a little plain, too, solid enough but not imaginative. Personal or individual would describe the work better. Because these words describe style rather than substance.

Personal indeed is the delicate but vigorous rhythmic animation, the singing (rather than dynamic) syncopation that permeates the work Personal and individual, too, is the whole orchestral sound of it, the accoustical superstructure that shimmers consistently. It doesn't glow like Debussy or glitter like Ravel. It is more like Berlioz in its translucency, or like Smetana, Mr. Martinu's compatriot. It is like Smetana because the shining sounds of it sing as well as shine; the instrumental complication is a part of the musical conception, not an icing laid over it.

* * *

The shimmer I speak of is produced accoustically by mixing acid sonorities with sweet ones. There is always an oboe around, a muted trumpet or horn, violin harmonics, or light tremolos played near the bridge. Against these are sweet flutes rising in thirds, or clarinets. Often the strings play subdivided, high and tenderly; and what they play is not corny but a shade acidulous in its harmony. Consistently the whole is pointed up by delicately percussive harp or piano. One would not have dreamed that after fifty years vulgarization of this kind of writing anybody could make it sound so fresh, so lovely, so varied, so entirely personal. One wouldn't have thought, either, that a composer could keep it up through a whole symphony, that he could find enough variants to make it interesting.

* * *

Martinu has kept it interesting, however, and made it deeply expressive. He has amplified his taste for acid-sweet mixtures into a full stylistic outlet for personal thoughts.

He has had no need of demagogy from the brass or of sob stuff from the strings. He uses both as musical instruments of an ensemble that constantly sings. It sings about Czechoslovakia in many timbres and many colors, but always the colors are clean and bright and always they are integrated into a shimmering pattern. The symphony is beautiful music and beautiful workmanship. And if, in spite of its impersonal subject matter (I take it to be a meditation about his native land), it is highly individual music nevertheless, that fact places Martinu already above his predecessor, Dvorak, and in the high company of Smetana, greatest of all those symphonic composers in whose work patriotism is of the essence.

Serge Koussevitzky

Who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 22 1942

MARTINU SYMPHONY IN PREMIERE HERE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Orchestra in Composer's First at Carnegie Hall

WORK WAS COMMISSIONED

Dedicated to Late Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky—'Eroica' of Beethoven Also Is Heard

By OLIN DOWNES

A symphony, new, modern in texture, unpretentious and very successful with the audience, and another symphony which, if there is one work supreme over all others in this form would receive our nomination for the distinguished post, made up the program given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The novelty was the First symphony of Bohuslav Martinu, given its first performance on any stage. The classic was Beethoven's "Eroica." Mr. Martinu's symphony was written in less than four months' time, about half of it being composed while he was teaching as one of the faculty of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Stockbridge, Mass., last Summer. Dedicated to the late Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, it is the first work commissioned by the foundation established in her memory.

The Composer's Aims

Mr. Martinu has written for the Boston Symphony program book a statement of his aims in this score, which represents his initial essay in the grand form. He says, in effect, that the proportions and scale of the symphonic structure have too often persuaded composers that they must take not only a serious but a grandiose attitude in its presence, and that this is dangerous to composers, who "must beware of false magnitude."

He continues: "The tendency, the sentiment to be greater than one is, can lead directly to an emphasis which, to say the least, is not essentially musical. Over-emphasis can certainly strain the limits of music and sound, and by sound I mean dynamics." . . . And "sheer orchestral power does not imply necessarily either grandeur or elevation."

We thought this idea was accepted some time ago. Melancholy testimony to its soundness exists in many scores, such as those of Gustave Mahler, or the properly dubbed "Brobdignagian" Seventh symphony of Shostakovich of more recent vintage. But it also could be said that if grandiosity is one of the dangers of a false attitude toward the symphony, another danger is that of a superficiality and insignificance in this form, as many a modern symphony of teacup dimensions and spirit has proved, while the composer pretentiously asserts that he has written a symphony.

On Hiding Poor Ability

In fact, under this emblem, many a modern who could not for the life of him produce a potent theme or develop it symphonically for the length of a movement—let alone a symphony—has enunciated the creed of simplicity, modesty of statement, economy of instrumentation and all the rest of it to cover his paucity of thought.

The sole question before us, which no explanation of a composer could answer, is whether Mr. Martinu has written an interesting symphony. He has. The music has an agreeable harmonic spice and it has a prevailing high brilliancy and clarity of instrumentation. There is considerable thematic relation between the parts and the main theme has more than a suspicion of folk-flavor.

Certain places are suggestive to us of Debussy. Perhaps the style is more eclectic than national—a thing which we believe the composer desires—or markedly personal in idiom. It is sufficiently evident, at a first hearing, that it is well done, that there is a fine sensibility in the thought and workmanship, and more, and deeper than that, in the slow movement. One is not willing to swear that all of the development is cogent and indispensable in each movement, and in general there is the impression of a composer felicitously making a shimmering fabric out of comparatively little. But certainly there is no need, on the part of a most sincere and accomplished musician, of deprecation of his work, and the approval of the public was warm and instantaneous. Dr. Koussevitzky led the composer repeatedly to the platform in response to the applause.

"Eroica" Music Discussed

The impression made by the "Eroica" symphony was fundamentally, of course, due to the greatness of the music, but also due to excellent program making and to the noble spirit of Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation. It is usually the custom to discuss details of such an interpretation; to point out where the conductor departed from tradition, and why, and how worthily. One could point to fluctuations of tempi yesterday in places where they do not invariably occur and to passages in which contrapuntal figures set against the theme were so emphasized that the main idea was pushed into the background, and so forth. What is important is an incomparable symphony, presented with great virility and elevation of thought, music which supplies answers to questions not customarily broached in a casual review or ever adequately advanced, save by music, and, in this sphere, Beethoven's music. We heard the "Eroica" of Beethoven projected memorably. The more laconic the statement, perhaps, the better.

Polyna Stoska in Recital Nov. 22

Polyna Stoska, soprano, will sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 22. Miss Stoska, born in Worcester of Lithuanian parents, received her early musical training in Boston. She continued her studies at the Juilliard Graduate School under Marcella Sembrich. Her operatic debut in Berlin was in the role of Euryanthe and she has appeared in opera, concert and radio throughout the continent. Upon her return to the United States she was honored by three engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Kirstein Thorborg, distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will make her first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Seversky to Speak At Symphony Nov. 15

Major Alexander P. de Seversky, World War flyer, airplane designer and manufacturer, who will speak at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 15, under the auspices of the Aeronautic Association of Boston, is one of the country's strongest advocates of an independent air force.

"The United States has not realized it real air power," says Major de Seversky. "We have primarily army and naval aviation used as auxiliary weapons. These are subject to and restricted by army and navy officials whose traditional thinking hampers the full use of our power as a separate strategic element."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
NOV 20 1942

Shostakovich 7th Played at Carnegie Hall

Last evening the Boston Symphony gave the first of its annual series of concerts in Carnegie Hall and following the fashion of the day featured the muchly-discussed Seventh Symphony of Shostakovich.

The customary capacity audience greeted the visitors and after the orchestra's performance of Haydn's beguiling G Major Symphony eagerly anticipated the Russian work that had already moved concert patrons to acrid pro and con argument.

Conductor Serge Koussevitsky directed with the score (Arturo Toscanini at the initial concert performance in this city conducted without notes).

It may be that the musical imitation of the sounds of modern warfare, according to the young Soviet composer, may, after the passage of time, greet the ears with a diminution of din and violence that is the case at present.

To be sure, Shostakovich's Seventh has moments of lyrical beauty but these are few are far between and separated by many pages of violent, ear-splitting tone combinations and numerous redundant passages, all of which, even when performed by so excellent a band as the Bostonians and under the musicianly guidance of Maestro Koussevitzky, still remain a difficult and disturbing work to enjoy.

GRENA BENNETT.

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 20 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 21 1942

This Clipping From NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
NOV 21 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY—Koussevitzky conducting: Carnegie Hall, Thurs., Nov. 19, at 8:45 P.M., and Sat., Nov. 21, at 2:30 P.M. . . . Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. (ST 3-6700), Fri., Nov. 20, at 8:30 P.M.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
NOV 23 1942

Themes and Variations

By HENRY SIMON

Musical Diary

Friday, Nov. 20—At Town Hall, Celius Dougherty and Vincenz Ruzicka played the premiere of a two-piano sonata by Paul Hindemith, which started with a most engaging and original first movement, with chime effects, and from there on became dry, academic, learned dissonance, such as only Hindemith can write. Maybe it's the effect of all those books full of footnotes at Yale, where Hindemith now is a professor.

The sonata and the rest of the varied program went with the customary Dougherty-and-Ruzicka tidiness and fine teamwork. Both gentlemen are leaving to join the Army shortly, but I couldn't detect any signs of feeling about the impending break-up of this successful team

* * *

Saturday—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony played the premiere of Bohuslav Martinu's First Symphony at Carnegie Hall. It is the first commissioned work of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and the other composers commissioned so far (mostly Americans) have a high standard set for them. It's "absolute" music, with no discernible program, and easy listening all the way through. Based on an extremely simple theme that appears in all four movements and isn't much more in its unadorned form than one note followed by the next above it, the whole is worked out with stunning orchestral virtuosity and variety. Much of Martinu's earlier work is strongly Czechish in character. The Symphony has, if anything, an American tinge from several passages of jazzy syncopation.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
NOV 22 1942

MARTINU SYMPHONY IN PREMIERE HERE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Orchestra in Composer's First at Carnegie Hall

WORK WAS COMMISSIONED

Dedicated to Late Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky—'Eroica' of Beethoven Also Is Heard

By OLIN DOWNES

A symphony, new, modern in texture, unpretentious and very successful with the audience, and another symphony which, if there is one work supreme over all others in this form would receive our nomination for the distinguished post, made up the program given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall.

The novelty was the First symphony of Bohuslav Martinu, given its first performance on any stage. The classic was Beethoven's "Eroica." Mr. Martinu's symphony was written in less than four months' time, about half of it being composed while he was teaching as one of the faculty of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center at Stockbridge, Mass., last Summer. Dedicated to the late Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, it is the first work commissioned by the foundation established in her memory.

The Composer's Aims

Mr. Martinu has written for the Boston Symphony program book a statement of his aims in this score, which represents his initial essay in the grand form. He says, in effect, that the proportions and scale of the symphonic structure have too often persuaded composers that they must take not only a serious but a grandiose attitude in its presence, and that this is dangerous to composers, who "must beware of false magnitude."

He continues: "The tendency, the sentiment to be greater than one is, can lead directly to an emphasis which, to say the least, is not essentially musical. Over-emphasis can certainly strain the limits of music and sound, and by sound I mean dynamics." . . . And "sheer orchestral power does not imply necessarily either grandeur or elevation."

We thought this idea was accepted some time ago. Melancholy testimony to its soundness exists in many scores, such as those of Gustave Mahler, or the properly dubbed "Brobdignagian" Seventh symphony of Shostakovich of more recent vintage. But it also could be said that if grandiosity is one of the dangers of a false attitude toward the symphony, another danger is that of a superficiality and insignificance in this form, as many a modern symphony of teacup dimensions and spirit has proved, while the composer pretentiously asserts that he has written a symphony.

On Hiding Poor Ability

In fact, under this emblem, many a modern who could not for the life of him produce a potent theme or develop it symphonically for the length of a movement—let alone a symphony—has enunciated the creed of simplicity, modesty of statement, economy of instrumentation and all the rest of it to cover his paucity of thought.

The sole question before us, which no explanation of a composer could answer, is whether Mr. Martinu has written an interesting symphony. He has. The music has an agreeable harmonic spice and it has a prevailing high brilliancy and clarity of instrumentation. There is considerable thematic relation between the parts and the main theme has more than a suspicion of folk-flavor.

Certain places are suggestive to us of Debussy. Perhaps the style is more eclectic than national—a thing which we believe the composer desires—or markedly personal in idiom. It is sufficiently evident, at a first hearing, that it is well done, that there is a fine sensibility in the thought and workmanship, and more, and deeper than that, in the slow movement. One is not willing to swear that all of the development is cogent and indispensable in each movement, and in general there is the impression of a composer felicitously making a shimmering fabric out of comparatively little. But certainly there is no need, on the part of a most sincere and accomplished musician, of deprecation of his work, and the approval of the public was warm and instantaneous. Dr. Koussevitzky led the composer repeatedly to the platform in response to the applause.

"Eroica" Music Discussed

The impression made by the "Eroica" symphony was fundamentally, of course, due to the greatness of the music, but also due to excellent program making and to the noble spirit of Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation. It is usually the custom to discuss details of such an interpretation; to point out where the conductor departed from tradition, and why, and how worthily. One could point to fluctuations of tempi yesterday in places where they do not invariably occur and to passages in which contrapuntal figures set against the theme were so emphasized that the main idea was pushed into the background, and so forth. What is important is an incomparable symphony, presented with great virility and elevation of thought, music which supplies answers to questions not customarily broached in a casual review or ever adequately advanced, save by music, and, in this sphere, Beethoven's music. We heard the "Eroica" of Beethoven projected memorably. The more laconic the statement, perhaps, the better.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
NOV 22 1942

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA concert[illegible] Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The program follows:
Symphony No. 1 (first performance), Martinu
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".....Beethoven

Smetana's Heir

WHAT a pleasure! What a pleasure to hear the Boston Symphony again! Yesterday afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall was substantial and delicious, with two symphonies for fare, an old and a new, the Beethoven "Eroica" and a First by the brilliant Czechish composer, Bohuslav Martinu. The music was fine and the renditions couldn't have been more elegant. Just think of it! An ensemble that sounds like an ensemble playing music that sounds like music! It restores one's faith; it really does.

* * *

The Martinu Symphony is a beaut. It is wholly lovely and doesn't sound like anything else. Original is not the word for it, because the thematic material is not quite that. The best of this, moreover, is folklorish in the good Czech tradition. The harmonic underpinning is a little plain, too, solid enough but not imaginative. Personal or individual would describe the work better. Because these words describe style rather than substance.

Personal indeed is the delicate but vigorous rhythmic animation, the singing (rather than dynamic) syncopation that permeates the work Personal and individual, too, is the whole orchestral sound of it, the accoustical superstructure that shimmers consistently. It doesn't glow like Debussy or glitter like Ravel. It is more like Berlioz in its translucency, or like Smetana, Mr. Martinu's compatriot. It is like Smetana because the shining sounds of it sing as well as shine; the instrumental complication is a part of the musical conception, not an icing laid over it.

* * *

The shimmer I speak of is produced accoustically by mixing acid sonorities with sweet ones. There is always an oboe around, a muted trumpet or horn, violin harmonics, or light tremolos played near the bridge. Against these are sweet flutes rising in thirds, or clarinets. Often the strings play subdivided, high and tenderly; and what they play is not corny but a shade acidulous in its harmony. Consistently the whole is pointed up by delicately percussive harp or piano. One would not have dreamed that after fifty years vulgarization of this kind of writing anybody could make it sound so fresh, so lovely, so varied, so entirely personal. One wouldn't have thought, either, that a composer could keep it up through a whole symphony, that he could find enough variants to make it interesting.

* * *

Martinu has kept it interesting, however, and made it deeply expressive. He has amplified his taste for acid-sweet mixtures into a full stylistic outlet for personal thoughts.

He has had no need of demagogy from the brass or of sob stuff from the strings. He uses both as musical instruments of an ensemble that constantly sings. It sings about Czechoslovakia in many timbres and many colors, but always the colors are clean and bright and always they are integrated into a shimmering pattern. The symphony is beautiful music and beautiful workmanship. And if, in spite of its impersonal subject matter (I take it to be a meditation about his native land), it is highly individual music nevertheless, that fact places Martinu already above his predecessor, Dvorak, and in the high company of Smetana, greatest of all those symphonic composers in whose work patriotism is of the essence.

Serge Koussevitzky

Who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon

Polyna Stoska in Recital Nov. 22

Polyna Stoska, soprano, will sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 22. Miss Stoska, born in Worcester of Lithuanian parents, received her early musical training in Boston. She continued her studies at the Juilliard Graduate School under Marcella Sembrich. Her operatic debut in Berlin was in the role of Euryanthe and she has appeared in opera, concert and radio throughout the continent. Upon her return to the United States she was honored by three engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Kirstein Thorborg, distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will make her first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening,

Seversky to Speak At Symphony Nov. 15

Major Alexander P. de Seversky, World War flyer, airplane designer and manufacturer, who will speak at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 15, under the auspices of the Aeronautic Association of Boston, is one of the country's strongest advocates of an independent air force.

"The United States has not realized it real air power," says Major de Seversky. "We have primarily army and naval aviation used as auxiliary weapons. These are subject to and restricted by army and navy officials whose traditional thinking hampers the full use of our power as a separate strategic element"

...with customary zeal

Prov. Journal 1 Nov 24

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

Martinů Work's Première Set for Tomorrow Evening

By Winthrop P. Tryon

Vermont is the place to go for a composer who wants to write some pretty good passages for orchestra. Vermont, that is to say, in July. Such conclusion, at least, may be drawn from what Bohuslav Martinů did while sojourning at Middlebury last summer. Music of his which illustrates the point comprises the Scherzo and the Largo of Mr. Martinů's Symphony No. 1, which has its world première at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, tomorrow evening.

The work, dedicated to the memory of Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, stands on the program of the regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony this week as well as on the bill of the university meeting.

There is no certain telling from a hurried examination of a new orchestral score just how the music will go in performance; but something about the look of the manuscript of this Symphony No. 1 indicates that the second and third divisions achieve what they go after—the one being a successful run on humor, and the second the same on sentiment. You go to Vermont in search of those two things, and you find them. Mr. Martinů had only to translate his holiday experiences and impressions into tone, and he had his Scherzo and his Largo done. Wherever his first division, Allegro, may have been designed, and wherever his final one, Allegro again, might be put on paper, he had the human part of his story safely and indelibly recorded.

* * *

One thing we know of Mr. Martinů that stands through everything; we know it from music of his which was brought to notice by the Boston Symphony last season, given, indeed, its first performance — Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra. We know that he stands strictly for form. One way of explaining him, he is neoclassic, though that is not to say that he follows a fashion. He likes orderly, regular construction according to historic methods. That made him ready in his brief vacationing in Vermont to set his ideas down and work them out with promptitude. He only had to fill in the outlines of the traditional Scherzo, with first section, trio, and reprise of the first section, and he had his exploit in comedy accomplished. Then he had only to express his romantic emotions through the mechanism of the song form, and he had his slow movement clinched.

* * *

If Mr. Martinů employed a small instrumental plan for his Concerto Grosso of a year ago, he provides business this time for nearly everything the Boston Symphony has. Piano, harps, and percussion of many sorts are called for, along with the strings, the brasses, and only an odd voice or two of the woods left out. He seems to have a generally full sonority, without a great deal of soloizing, and he works up what appear on the page like strong climaxes. Yet the direction for forte is restrainedly used, and for double-forte, as far as a quick turning of the leaves showed, not at all. Crescendo effects, in other words, reside in the multiplication of instruments rather than in forcible treatment of them.

Now, then, disputing the moderns, who have tried to assure us that Aristotelian rule and restraint are things of the past, comes along a man who would convince us that they are just as applicable in art as ever. In the Symphony No. 1, strength, power, and massiveness come to realization, when wanted, without drive or noise. In this work, unless impression errs, we hear what an orchestra sounds like when its every instrument has to contribute to the communication, whether of light whim or of deep-down passion.

Symphony Fund Progresses

Half the money necessary to meet the needs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the current season has been pledged.

This was dramatically revealed yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Orchestra in Symphony Hall.

Charles H. Watkins, executive vice-chairman of the finance committee, had just announced from the platform that the original figure of $188,000 needed had been reduced by gifts and pledges to $101,000, when Seth T. Gano, a member of the committee, interrupted to report that an anonymous donor, already a contributor through the Friends, had sent in a check for $5,000 as an unrestricted gift.

Shortly thereafter, Jerome D. Greene, president of the Trustees, who was presiding in the absence in Washington of Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Friends, announced that another gift of $10,000 had been received on the unrestricted basis, thus providing a substantial beginning of an unrestricted fund.

Mr. Watkins also reported that the Trustees, in addition to performing their duties without compensation, had themselves contributed $25,500.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, who had expected to attend but was prevented by an official engagement, sent a letter which was read by Mr. Greene, expressing his belief in the necessity of supporting the arts in wartime as one of the things for which we are fighting.

Mayor Maurice J. Tobin made a cordial speech voicing official appreciation of the distinction the orchestra has brought to the city and also declaring his belief in the spiritual value of great music.

A resolution was adopted conveying to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky the Friends' appreciation of his service to the community not only as conductor of the orchestra but as founder of the Berkshire Music Center.

After the business meeting, the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky played Beethoven's Second Symphony, and then a reception was held.

Bach Suite for Flute Heard

Dec. 1 Monitor

"Danton" is the title of an unpublished and unperformed opera which Nikolai Lopatnikoff, attending the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert in Symphony Hall last evening, composed in 1932 and got started in rehearsal in Germany, at the Cologne Opera, the following year. The work was tested on the Cologne stage under the musical direction of Eugene Szenkar. It is a piece in four acts, libretto by Boris Pines, after a play by Georges Büchner. Its dramatic subject matter is drawn from events in the French Revolution, and characters and action are wholly historic.

The principal figure, Danton, is portrayed in a heroic and, as musicians say, "sympathetic" light; though outcomes, naturally enough, are tragic. The role of Danton is composed for a tenor. The leading feminine figure, Danton's wife, Julie, is represented by a soprano. A chief scene pictures the Revolutionary Tribunal, where the chorus has an important function.

Mr. Lopatnikoff was twice called to the platform by last night's audience, to acknowledge applause for his Sonfonietta, op. 27, which was performed under the hands of Richard Burgin. The Sinfonietta, in three movements, has significance from the instrumental standpoint because it employs single woodwinds and brasses, instead of the classic pairs, thus freeing the harmony of historic harness. Single flute, oboe, clarinet, and so on down the plan result in juxtaposed rather than merged colors—a striped and banded, Egyptian-like effect.

The Sinfonietta's place on the program was just before the intermission. Ahead of all stood Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings, Georges, Laurent, flute soloist. The concert closed with Mahler's pleasant-sounding, if patience-straining, Symphony in D major, No. 1. Lengthy or not, the symphony hangs together in its four parts and unity must be allowed among its merits.

The occasion started off with a recitation on behalf of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Helen Howe, monologist. Old-style jacket and hat supplementing her costume, Miss Howe acted the part of a Friday afternoon Symphony devotee and observed, for one thing, that Horatio of the Saturday night crowd was puzzled by Shostakovitch. She surmised that Shostakovitch might, in turn, if things happened that way, be puzzled by Horatio.

She made reminiscent remark on Arthur Nikisch, head of the orchestra time away gone. After her, was not Nikisch of sleeve tipped by long white cuff somewhat brought back to view when the assistant conductor, Mr. Burgin, got in charge of affairs? Directing without baton does give a man a special look. Extended arm and spread-out hand do indeed qualify the figure the chief musician makes.

W. P. T.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Helen Howe, the Boston monologist, astonished and delighted last evening Symphony audience by appearing on the stage before the concert proper in a gentle little sketch dramatizing the Boston Symphony's need of the help of its friends.

Richard Burgin then conducted a fresh and interesting program for this second concert of the Monday evening series: Bach's graceful, charming Overture in B minor for Flute and Strings (Georges Laurent, soloist); the dry, rather cerebral Sinfonietta, Op. 27, of Nikolai Lopatnikoff; and the First Symphony of Gustav Mahler. The two latter works, Mr. Burgin conducted at the concerts of Nov. 7 and 8 at which Miss Howe also appeared.

To state things in order, Mr. Burgin read the Bach Overture with a nice blending of graceful simplicity and eloquence. One might observe that "Overture" (in the French style after Lully) really stands for the three sections of the first movemnt (Grave, a fugal Allegro, Lentement), after which follows a suite of dances. Mr. Laurent brilliantly tossed off most of his solo parts, although there were moments when the rhythm got out of hand, or when the flute was barely audible.

The Lopatikoff has its interesting parts which seem better than the whole. There are a number of pleasant short melodic bursts and the work has plenty of rhythmic "go," but without a clearly visible destination. Chief among its good points is the Sinfonietta's well-balanced form. But the abundance of dry figurations, the bustling, antic rhythms leave an impression of a rather bloodless ebullience.

Some day the tunesmiths of Tin Pan Alley will discover Mahler and will hack and slice his music apart as they have that of Tchaikovsky. For Mahler was a lyricist and his music abounds in appealing melodies. Despite this, Mahler has made his way slowly with the musical public, perhaps because one must deliberately attune his mind to the romantic and the mystical in his music. It is not for the literal minded.

Someone has said that Mahler's intention was often the greatest thing in his music. And it is true that one must accept the nobleness of intellect, the earnestness and integrity, with the grandiloquence, the lack of cohesion and unity.

Mr. Burgin certainly has found the rewarding approach to this Symphony, for he bestows upon it the proper fervor, the warmth and expansiveness of spirit. Generally the orchestra played very well indeed for him.

The program will be repeated at 3 this afternoon.—J. W. R.

SYMPHONY IN FIRST MONDAY

Burgin Conducts Music for All Tastes

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

At last evening's Symphony Concert Miss Helen Howe repeated the monologue that she offered at the regular concerts of a fortnight ago. Once more in plain sight of the audience she togged herself out in the habiliments of an elderly matron and, in the guise of one greeting her friends during intermission, made a plea for the orchestra's support. Apparently she will repeat her performance, if that is the proper word, this afternoon.

This diversion out of the way, the orchestra, under the direction of Richard Burgin, turned its attention to the real business of the evening. In part the programme was that which Mr. Burgin conducted at the concerts of Nov. 7 and 8. The repeated items were the Sinfonietta of Lopatnikoff, with the composer once more in attendance, and the First Symphony of Mahler. Before these numbers came Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings, with Georges Laurent as the soloist. In this capacity he acquitted himself with the artistry that we have come to take for granted.

There was music last evening for many if not for all tastes. The Bach Suite is pure formalism, undiluted classicism, some of it a little on the dry side, though it is probably heresy to say so, and much of it charming and delightful. For those who like modern music the Lopatnikoff Sinfonietta is an excellent example. Neoclassic in the accepted manner, it is dissonant enough to be intriguing, yet it never becomes downright disagreeable. Perhaps the days for that sort of thing are over. Its rhythmic vitality commends it and it is by no means lacking in melody. The presence of the composer no doubt helped swell the applause.

And between these impersonal extremes the concert offered a bit of romanticism-plus and as personal a symphony as was ever put on paper. Like Beethoven Mahler travelled a long distance between his First Symphony and his Ninth, but he put more of himself into his initial symphonic effort than Beethoven did. There may be a hint of Bruckner in the second movement and of Liszt in the grandiloquent close, which aroused the audience as it always does, but the rest is pure Mahler, though in this instance with the enthusiasm and some of the indiscretions of youth. As conductor Mr. Burgin showed abundant sympathy for these three very dissimilar compositions.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
DEC 2 - 1942

Shostakovitch 7th Will Be Discussed

Next Monday evening the widely-heralded Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony will be discussed by Theodore M. Finney at Foster Memorial Hall. This work will have its first hearing in Pittsburgh the following Saturday, December 12, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 110 players under Serge Koussevitzky, who has already given the work in Boston and New York City, as well as at the Berkshire Festival last summer.

This symphony is the latest and greatest work of the world renowned young Soviet composer, who wrote it under fire during the Nazi siege of Leningrad. The score was microfilmed in the Soviet Union, rushed via airplane to Teheran, Iran (Persia), thence by automobile to Cairo, Egypt, and from there to the United States by another plane.

The first American performance, Sunday, July 19, 1942, was broadcast by the NBC Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini, and created a country-wide sensation through its magnitude, overpowering force and impressiveness. There is no charge for admission to the lecture, which is open to the public. Mr. Finney will also discuss other works to be given by the Boston Orchestra on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, December 12 and 13.

The lecture and the concerts are under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
DEC 5 - 1942

French Heroes Earn Tribute Of Symphony

Boston — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced the concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which referred to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

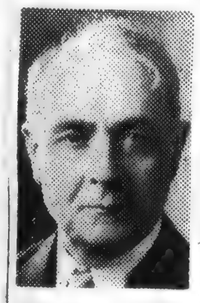
Trustees of the orchestra confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 3 - 19

Boston Symphony Group Coming to City Dec. 14

Agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians Union, headed by James C. Petrillo, today restored the famous orchestra to this season's concert calendar at the Eastman Theater.

As a result of ending the long-standing feud between the union and the Boston Symphony, hitherto the only non-union major symphonic organization, the orchestra will play here Monday evening, Dec. 14, it was announced by Arthur M. See, manager of the Civic Music Association. Serge Koussevitzky, world-famous conductor, will direct the orchestra.



KOUSSEVITZKY Returns

For 10 years, the orchestra has been a top attraction on the Civic Music Association's concert series. It was scheduled to return this year, but the engagement was cancelled when the Musicians' Union threatened to ban the Eastman Theater to all union musical organizations, which would have included the Rochester Philharmonic and Civic orchestras.

One of those most pleased by the report that the Boston aggregation would play here again was Dorothy Maynor, great Negro soprano, who arrived today to sing with the Rochester Philharmonic under Jose Iturbi in the Eastman Theater tonight.

It was through Koussevitzky that Miss Maynor won instant fame when he gave the then unknown singer a hearing three years ago with his orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, in compliance with a half-forgotten promise he had made a long time before. In the middle of the hearing, Koussevitzky stopped the music and exclaimed to Miss Maynor:

"This is a miracle. The world must hear you."

The world did hear her, and now Miss Maynor rates as one of the four greatest Negro singers, along with Marian Anderson, Paul Robeson and Roland Hayes. As material evidence of her success, the plump, smiling singer, who three years ago was an obscure choir singer, arrived here swathed in costly mink furs.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942

HEAVY DEMAND EXPECTED FOR CONCERT HERE

Boston Symphony To Play Dec. 14 At Eastman

Civic Music Association officials expect a barrage of ticket demands from music lovers today as a result of Director Arthur M. See's announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in the Eastman Theater Monday, Dec. 14.

The appearance for the 10th consecutive year of the renowned orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, in this year's concert series previously had been canceled because of the orchestra's non-union status and threats of the musicians union to bar the Eastman to union musicians if it filled an engagement there.

Yesterday came the signing of a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, headed by James C. Petrillo. Word of the orchestra's admission to the federation was followed shortly by See's announcement that the orchestra would be heard here.

Adding interest to word of the engagement was See's further announcement that Koussevitsky will conduct the orchestra in a performance of Dmitri Shostakovitch's Seventh Symphony, a work composed in Leningrad while the city was under bombardment, and warmly acclaimed by critics following its recent New York City world premier. The Boston conductor's reading of the Haydn 88th Symphony will complete the program.

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave the eighth regular concert of its 62d season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Marcella Denya, soprano, and Jennie Tourel, contralto, and soloists and orchestra were assisted by the Radcliffe Choral Society (G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor). The program was as follows: Milhaud .....Le Cortege Funebre
Debussy .....La Damoiselle Elue
Ravel....Sheherazade; Daphnis and Chloe (2d Suite)

The unionization of the orchestra certainly didn't prevent orchestra, conductor, soloists and chorus from achieving a glowing success with a heady program of French music yesterday. On the contrary, now that the dread bogie of unionization is an accomplished fact (accompanied perhaps by a certain amount of turning-over-in-graves), the orchestra, trustees, audiences and everyone else may settle back in the anticipation of purely musical distractions from now on.

A program of music devoted almost wholly to the French impressionists invariably results in a curiously suspended sensation as though you had dined on a pound of pink bon bons—and still felt wonderful two hours later. The Milhaud's "Le Cortege Funebre" alone provided relief, but as it came first and as it is no great shakes in any case, its effect was soon forgotten.

Although its sincerity is unquestioned, this solemn dirge somehow fails to convince its hearers of that fact. The long drawn out inner section with its curious timbres is certainly elegiac, and the momentum of the march rhythm is certainly tragic, yet for all the unrelieved gloom and bleakness it seems the product of skill rather than creative drive, notwithstanding the terrible circumstances of its creation.

"La Damoiselle Elue," on the other hand, marvelously conveys the impression of pure, triple-distilled inspiration—and skill too. Debussy, of course, was struggling to break away from the pedestrian herd bellwethered by Massenet and Saint-Saens. He had tried hard to please, but with this extraordinarily evocative subject he could restrain himself no longer. Yet it often harks back to the past; Tristan is there all through, the very same Tristan he later hooted at so mercilessly in "The Children's Corner." And formal design is there, too, as the four-note motto is endlessly repeated, now melodically and again rhythmically.

The performance by orchestra and chorus was extraordinarily effective. It's expected of the orchestra, to be sure, but it is seldom a chorus so perfectly captures the nuance, the line and the diction as this one did. Its vocal quality, too, was of just the proper purity to evoke the poetic image of the musical narrative. Marcelle Denya, appearing with this orchestra for the first time, achieved a generally splendid vocal and dramatic impersonation of the Damoiselle, and came back after the interval to sing Ravel's enchanting setting of Klingsor's poems with especial distinction.

Only occasionally did she err in pitch or in taste, and, considering the enormous vocal difficulties both the Debussy and the Ravel present, her singing was distinctly noteworthy. Her vocal style, although slightly florid, had a certain "politesse" and the voice itself, although slightly nasal, was of fine quality in all but its topmost tones. Perhaps most rewarding was her feeling for the music itself, which she obviously knows from long association. Jennie Tourel, whose role in "La Damoiselle" is all too brief, sang exquisitely.

The program was brought to a close with another one of Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent performances of the second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe." Frankly, we just can't see how the orchestra does it. The concert opened with the playing of "La Marseillaise," Dr. Koussevitzky announcing himself that it was a tribute to the French sailors who destroyed their fleet and themselves in a last gesture to the honor of the nation. The orchestra is out of town next week, but on its return on Dec. 18 will have as its guest artist Gregor Piatigorsky, a good union member—and, of course, a notable cellist.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky was without a smile as he walked to the conductor's stand on the stage of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. As he entered, the orchestra rose as if in greeting, followed by the audience. To the whole standing crowd he announced, dramatically: "This afternoon we shall begin with "La Marseillaise,' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships, for the peace of the world and the honor of France!"

And how "La Marseillaise" was played! Hearing that national anthem for the first time from a full symphonic orchestra was a new experience, and it sent shivers down your spine. The audience applauded Mr. Koussevitzky's announcement, which, one assumes, referred to the loss of life when Admiral Delaborde ordered the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon, to save it from Nazi hands.

Following the customary playing and singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," Mr. Kouusevitzky then addressed himself to a superb all-French program that began with Darius Milhaud's tonal memorial to the France crushed by the Nazi invasion of 1940, "Le Cortege Funebre." The other pieces were Debussy's "La Damoiselle Elue," unheard at these concerts since 1931, with soprano Marcelle Denya and contralto Jennie Tourel as soloists, and the choral part taken by the Radcliffe Choral Society; the three songs by Ravel, "Scheherazade," again with Miss Denya as soloist, and the Second Suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music.

Yesterday's performance of "'La Damoiselle Elue" (by a union orchestra, be it noted!) was nothing short of magnificent. Debussy's youthful score is not a spectrum of glowing colors as are the orchestral masterpiece of his maturity, but it is music for the greater part of utmost refinement and delicacy. The sheen and gossamer weave of the introduction was played with astonishing finesse, and for the remainder of the work the Boston Symphony gave a thousandth demonstration of orchestral skill and musicianship in its highest form.

Miss Denya made her Boston debut. Some, however, must have been aware of her excellence from recordings she has made, or had heard good reports from other cities of her clear, warm soprano voice and her command of styles. Early Dante Gabriel Rossetti combined with early Debussy inevitably produces an effect of almost uncomfortable esthetic purity.

While Rossetti's verses now appear nonsensical in a quaintly fragrant way, they are carried along on the flow of the music, some of which is Wagner strained through Massenet. As a result a tenuous and pious style is demanded of the singers. Miss Denya met the requirement admirably. Her phrasing was graceful, her intonation exact.

Miss Tourel, also new to Boston, disposed of her shorter part excellently. She, too, has a voice of deep and colorful quality, and she, too, sang with the proper style. One has only admiration for the fresh, homogeneous tone of the Radcliffe singers, who had been well prepared by their conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth.

Milhaud introduced his "Le Cortege Funebre" to Boston just two years ago this month, when its grinding, oppressive communication of sorrow, even though a saxophone is among the solo instruments, made a vivid impression. If it did not sound so elemental yesterday, the reason may have been that it was overshadowed by the rest of the program.

The three songs of "Scheherazade" went nicely, although one had expected from Miss Deyna a little more exotic delivery of the text. Orchestrally the music was a web of coruscating tints. So was "Daphnis and Chloe," which has come to be a "Koussevitzky specialty." The concert will prove, one suspects, among the most memorable of the season.

Next week the Boston Symphony goes on its Western tour. The week following Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Suite for Strings by Corelli; Mozart's E-flat Symphony (K. 543) and the Second Symphony of Brahms. C. W. D.

SYMPHONY IN BOW TO FRANCE

Music by Frenchmen Makes Up Concert List

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Not "The Star Spangled Banner," but "La Marseillaise" began yesterday afternoon's Symphony concert, although the American national anthem followed immediately after the French. With much emotion Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he was playing "La Marseillaise" in honor of the French officers and sailors who gave their lives at Toulon "for the freedom of the world and of France." The performance of it was fiery and spirited, that of "The Star Spangled Banner" as solemn as usual. Does the Doctor think that the French have more fight in them than we have?

No doubt yesterday's programme was put together, at least in its essentials, before certain stirring events took place on both sides of the Mediterranean. Anyway, it was an all-French programme, so the performance of "La Marseillaise" was doubly appropriate. At the head of the list came, also appropriately, Milhaud's "Le Cortege Funebre," which the composer himself introduced to us two years ago. Composed in May, 1940, just before the German invasion, the piece reflects the feelings of Frenchmen in that dark hour. Undeniably gripping at the outset and for some time thereafter, it misses a little in musical effect through lack of contrast.

The rest of the afternoon fell to Debussy and Ravel. The former was represented by his cantata, "La Damoiselle Elue," after "The Blessed Damozel" of Rossetti, and the latter by his "Sheherazade" and the Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe." In Debussy's music the orchestra was assisted by the Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, Marcelle Denya, soprano, and Jennie Tourel, contralto. Mlle. Denya also sang the three songs of Ravel.

We are inclined to think of romanticism as a German product, even though a Frenchman, Berlioz, was the arch-instigator of it. But surely the vocal works of Debussy and Ravel heard yesterday belong also to the romantic movement, and the spirit and impulse behind them are very different from that which actuates the music of our our own day. Not a very remote past, but a very different one. There is a warmth and expressiveness in Debussy's early score that his later music almost entirely misses. Yet in it is to be found his characteristic taste and exquisite craftsmanship. A pity that for the moment he could not have been an Englishman, for the French translation of Rossetti's poem is markedly inferior to the original; "fort vol d'anges horizontal" for "angels in strong level flight" is a case in point. Anyway, Debussy captured the spirit of the poem and that is what really matters.

On the vocal side, there have been more distinguished performances here than that of yesterday. It was by the orchestra that the message of poet and composer was chiefly conveyed. Nor is Mlle. Denya, a proficient but rather colorless soprano, the ideal interpreter for the richly imaginative music [illegible]. Conductor and orchestra were impeccable; they were in the suite displeasingly music of "Daphnis and Chloe," but in "Sheherazade," that is not enough.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Pays Tribute to Frenchmen

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced Friday's concert by announcing: "We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France. Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
DEC 5 - 1942

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 5 - 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 5 - 1942

MISSING
PAGE(S)

Boston Symphony Scores In Shostakovich's Seventh

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Koussevitzky stepped into the finale with a zest that figuratively was breath-taking; and in spite of the unbelievable tempo, the same excellent playing prevailed.

To undertake a review of the Shostakovich is to place oneself in a rather unenviable dilemma—either horn of which is fraught with pitfalls.

Must Stand On Merits

It is perhaps unfortunate, from a purely musical point of view, that so many opinions of the work preceded its first hearing for many. That it is an expression of and a tribute to a noble and heroic people in time of great peril is in itself of no little significance. But after the turmoil has subsided, the seventh symphony must stand or fall on its own musical merits.

The work is stupendous, if for no other reason than its length and it is even majestic and awe inspiring in its boldness and brutality. There are many passages that are melodiously beautiful in the romantic sense of the term, while as a piece of orchestral scoring it is a masterpiece. There is, without a doubt no composer today who knows better than does Mr. Shostakovich the art of blending and dovetailing instruments.

But these are all means to an end—they are not the thoughts and ideas themselves. The very things on which the work must depend for its future existence are the ones that appear most questionable at present. The themes, for the most part, lack conviction and that subtle something that demands their inevitable development and resolution. As a result the work seems inconclusive. (Perhaps this is an unwitting reflection of the state of the war at the time the work was composed.)

Theme Extended

While Dr. Koussevitzky gave more coherence to the first two movements than has yet been heard, no amount of conducting will compensate for the extended theme and variations in the middle of the first—the bolero rhythm has been completely exploited by another composer.

The closing movements, though fearful and wonderful in places, are too lengthy to hold together. And it appears that continued hearings will not improve the situation.

Dr. Koussevitzky, however, is to be congratulated for having brought this work to Ann Arbor while the orchestra is to be highly commended for a magnificent performance. Perhaps the composer too, after the smoke of battle has died away, will view the siege of Leningrad in perspective and find it of shorter duration, with a resulting re-edition of the symphony accordingly.

THRONG THRILLED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Orchestra Presents Dazzling Performance

BY HERBERT ELWELL

One of the most important musical events of the season, the appearance of the Boston Orchestra in the Cleveland Civic Concert Course last night, found Cleveland music lovers duly appreciative of the privilege of hearing Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians. Gasoline rationing did not prevent Public Music Hall from being filled to capacity, and enthusiasm reached an even higher pitch than it has on some former occasions when the Bostonians have thrilled us with their superb playing.

It is always a temptation to become rhapsodical in describing the work of this orchestra for all its glistening is pure gold, and what seems like magic in the extraordinary flexibility and resource of the instrument as it is played upon by the conductor is no facile legerdemain but the flowering of sound craftsmanship under the guidance and nourishment of true genius.

Although last night's program was richer in virtuosic effects than it was in thoughtful musical substance, one was fully aware of having been led into music's inner sanctum. And even if one had had to sit on the doorstep, one would have been happy feeling the rejuvenating surge of a revelation and finding adequate expression for it only in loud cheers.

Proportions Dazzling

The Tschaikowsky Fourth Symphony, with all its garish fanfares, assumed proportions of dazzling grandeur, and beneath its extravagant exterior one was made to sense discipline and integrity. Seldom does one hear a brass section behave with such beautiful efficiency. One marvelled again at the attacks, the mellowness of the flutes and other wood winds, the uncanny blend, with solo parts emerging only to be folded back into the fabric of the whole so gently that they appeared as colors in a transparent prism.

The refinement of texture was even more noticable in the Second Suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with its precipitous, headlong climax. The marvelous singing tone, the delicacy and agility of the strings was exhibited in the opening Suite by Corelli. The "Badinerie" of this work set a gay pattern for the first half, which promised to continue with Prokofief's "Lieutenant Kije." But this music, intended for a moving picture and filled as it is with entertaining tricks of orchestration, sounded too episodic for its length and proved to be the one weak spot in the program.

Kallman's Masterpiece

To the Editor:

MR. KALLMAN in his recent reviews of the Choral Union concerts does grave injustice to the corps of music critics. Many invectives rightly could be used to describe his reviews, invectives as violent as those he uses and more justified. Suffice it to say that Mr. Kallman is guilty of gross and juvenile hysteria.

His reviews lack perspective, balance and constructive criticism. The man who sets himself up as a critic, particularly of music, must have a profound background in the subject he professes to judge. Furthermore, since music represents one of man's greatest and most lasting achievements in artistic and intellectual expression, the critic should have a well-developed, a thoroughly mature mind capable of sustained and intelligent thought. Without these rudiments no person can take on the extremely difficult task of passing musical judgment. A review of Mr. Kallman's reviews finds a conglomerate of intemperate bombast and musically inane statements.

Mr. Kallman seems to be attempting George Bernard Shaw's now famous and hackneyed trick of violent criticism. Shaw gained notoriety, then with his superior judgment he gained fame. The gentleman from Michigan appears headed for oblivion; his judgment does not back his line of attack.

SPECIFICALLY, he states that Ravel's "Bolero" must be the basis for present day music. What he means to convey is that he believes the use of the drum as a solo instrument in the first movement of Shostakovich's Seventh makes the first movement monotonous. Repetition has always been a means in symphony of impressing a theme. Beethoven made use of it. Granted Ravel's "Bolero" is monotonous. But Shostakovich has a musical story to tell. The musical greatness of the symphony is how well does he portray his story. As an amateur I believe he does a superb job. The mark of greatness in any critic is an ability to criticize constructively. The musically uncultured can write a condemnation. "Any fool can criticize, and most do," aptly applies.

Again the gentleman berates the Seventh because he has to listen to "a longer than average blitzkrieg persisting elephantinely all through Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony." Set alongside the statement of Dr. Koussevitzky, preeminent as a renowned music authority. He states, "It is a great work which will take a certain place in the world's musical literature." Without rancor may I ask whose judgment is at fault. When the apprentice deigns to criticize the master, the apprentice plays the fool.

True genius is always precocious, and we could forgive Mr. Kallman for his caustic condemnations were he to even show a flash of brilliance in his reviews. Alas, such is not the case. He berated Albert Spalding for very inferior work. He set himself above the judgment of "dinner music." He majestically relegates Sibelius and Tchaikovsky as second-rate composers with fifth-rate themes. Surely his judgment is entirely lacking.

But beside lack of constructive criticism and lack of judgment our noble knight lacks balance to his published reviews. He always manages to hear half the program. In Spalding's recital, it was the first. This time he appears to have arrived quite late. It is only as an afterthought that he added a mention of Haydn's beautiful work.

HOWEVER, we must not be too severe in our condemnation of Mr. Kallman. No man, however perfect his powers of analysis may be, can dash off a masterpiece at 11 p.m. and have it ready for the morning press.

—Caleb Warner

* * *

Discrepancy

To the Editor:

THERE was considerable discrepancy in the opinions expressed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and The Michigan Daily's alleged music critic, Chester Kallman, on the relative merits of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony.

As indicated in Thursday's Daily, Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony is "great music on the basis of its magnificent depth and power and excellent musical workmanship alone." These are the words of Dr. Koussevitzky whose opinion on any classical composition can be valued highly.

The Russian-born composer, in answer to the charge that Shostakovich's latest work had gained considerable attention because of its political significance, stated that, "Aside from the fact that it embodies Russian political ideology, it is a great work which will take a certain place in the world's musical literature."

But there seems to be a totally different opinion expressed in Mr. Kallman's criticism of the Symphony. If I had not heard the concert myself and had noted the appreciative and enthusiastic reception of the capacity audience at Hill Auditorium Wednesday night, I would have wondered why anyone would want to pay attention to Shostakovich, including the conductors in this country who have accepted his Symphony enthusiastically.

In direct contrast to Koussevitzky's intelligent and rational interpretation of the Symphony is Mr. Kallman's shallow accusal that Koussevitzky chose the Seventh Symphony because of his fondness for Shostakovich. "The Symphony," Mr. Kallman wrote, "has a few raucous, good-natured spots, but they are far apart and separated by stretches of insignificant noise, illuminated here and there by fifth-rank themes from second-rank composers, notably Tchaikowsky and Sibelius." And this immature critic contrasts it to "pseudo-exciting programmatic boredom." I imagine there are many Daily readers who are still trying to untangle Mr. Kallman's original use of the English language.

There isn't one intelligent Daily reader who can put much stock in Mr. Kallman's "pseudo-interpretative genius" when it is in direct contrast to the intelligent criticism of one who actually knows what he is talking about, as Dr. Koussevitzky.

MR. KALLMAN has been accepted as music critic on The Daily because of his musical knowledge. His criticism of the Seventh Symphony fails to bear out this assertion.

—E.Z.

* * *

Witty Critic

To the Editor:

AS WAS only to be expected, The Daily's music review of the Shostakovich Seventh presented Chester Kallman telling us with bored martyrdom that the symphony was nothing but a tangle of raucous and repetitious noise, that he had had a painful evening, and that Koussevitzky's desire to perform the symphony was merely the result of an uncritical enthusiastic whim.

The truth of the matter is that almost everyone excepting Kallman and his Klever Kompanions realized that they were witnessing a magnificent performance of the work that tells most fully the unconquerable spirit of the Soviet people, their intense suffering, love and brotherhood, and the inspiring strength with which they have defended their homeland from the Nazi onslaught.

Almost everyone in the auditorium who was not impervious to a love wider than the single heart knew that this symphony was written with blood and fire and an epic love that is saving civilization and that makes the witty Daily critic look pretty insignificant.

I believe that most people will agree with Mr. Kallman that Shostakovich does not have the great genius of Beethoven. But that is scarcely the issue. The common men of the earth are fighting to build a free future, and they have a spokesman. Shostakovich writes of all humanity: of the working people who are fighting for their right to dignity, liberty and love: the music he composes sings their affection and their blundering, their wonderful courage, their determination before which we can only stand and watch in worship and with silent tears for the sorrow that accompanies their struggle.

THERE is banality in the music, because it is present in the people: Mr. Kallman may call it a fault if he will. It is very easy to sit on the sidelines and make wisecracks. It is very easy to retire into the self and come out only to pronounce a quip. The fact remains that the common people have no passionate and exalting defender in the field of music except in Russia, and large numbers of the common people look to Shostakovich with devotion. The private artist today looks pretty futile.

It is quite possible that Mr. Kallman has consorted too much with poets who have descended out of sight in the deep well of self-love.

—Nelson Bentley, Grad

MUSIC

DUE to a few differences of opinion and some misunderstandings and misinterpretations, what started out as a short review of the Boston Symphony's concert has become a lengthy controversy. It is at least gratifying to a reviewer of music that there are people on the campus who take their music seriously, even if they do not agree with him and write to say so. That this would entail also a discussion of his personal life and prose style he hardly had a right to expect, but even this has occurred.

To begin with, he should like to explain that due to lack of space, which is no one's fault these days, the review was cut by the editors, so that points that might have been made clearer remained only oracular and unspecific. In particular, there were a short list of Shostakovich's orchestra devices and mention of a specific loan from Sibelius' Fifth Symphony; —but this would hardly make much difference now. Neither would a page of assurance that he not only heard the Haydn Symphony and enjoyed it immensely, but even was standing at his seat singing the National Anthem at the opening of the concert. It has all gotten far beyond that.

First of all, however, there seems to have been some misunderstanding of the reviewer's term "second rank," by which he did not mean the same as second rate. By composers of second rank he humbly enough meant only to say that they were not in the class of, for example, Mozart, Beethoven or Handel. If this sounded high-handed, he apologizes. There seem also to have been a few minor misunderstandings, but they appear mostly to have been due to a slight difficulty in managing English and have nothing to do with music.

MAINLY, though, your reviewer is puzzled at what people want from him. Mr. Bentley berates him for not being aware of the Larger Implications of Life, while a certain Mr. Stubbins in an unpublished opus pictures him in a series of horrifying attitudes, the most crushing of which is the reduction of music to programmatic terms. Well, what is it boys, Life or Music?

Your reviewer is afraid he believes that "Life" exists in music only so far as the music sustains itself; if that is programmatic or self-loving, then he doesn't understand the words. As far as Ravel's Bolero goes, he has profound respect for the virtuosity that sustains its hackneyed excitement. If he does not, however, think that the crescendo is the acme of art, perhaps that is pettiness. Who can be sure? If he thinks more has been said of war by eight instruments in Stravinsky's L'Histoire d'un Soldat than in all of the Seventh Symphony, that is, after all, what he thinks. If he is suspect of any music that pretends to be the spirit of a people, even if it be scored for three more tympani and a brass band of blood and fire, perhaps it is because he believes in music as music and not as a form of escaping political responsibility by having political experience as concerts.

If he is sorry for being, at times, tactless he can only look to his own critics and admit that as far as tactlessness goes, he is, after all, only an apprentice.

— Chester Kallman

MISSING
PAGE(S)

Chorus To Sing At Carnegie Hall

Invited By Koussevitsky To Appear On Jan 7, 9

The Sarah Lawrence chorus has scored another honor in being invited by Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra to sing with them at two performances in Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 7th and the afternoon of January 9th. About fifty-five girls have signed up to sing the selection "Blessed Damosel" by DeBussey.

Since the performance comes during Christmas vacation, this means that many girls will have to come from considerable distances for that week—for rehearsals will take place on January 4th, 5th and 6th in New York City. Some of the stronger singers among the chorus alumnae have been recruited to make up the members of the chorus. Among this possible list of alumnae are: Audrey Oakley Haynes, Pat Banks Wallower, Jean VanSinderen, Lillian Jacobs, Helen Brown, Marion Schapirro, Marion Crane Graef and Harvette Kutner.

Although the Radcliffe College chorus has done the same selection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Harvard Glee Club has sung at various times under Koussevitsky, Sarah Lawrence is the first college outside of the Boston vicinity to receive such an honor.

"One of the greatest honors any chorus can have is to be invited to sing by Koussevitsky," said Emily Seaman, president of the chorus, "and I think it's—well, it's just plain wonderful!"

MUSIC

FOR SOME REASON, no doubt a secret shared by only a select group of modern composers, Ravel's "Bolero" has become the musically metaphysical basis for the present war. Last Sunday Harl MacDonald's "Bataan," as played by the N.Y. Philharmonic, utilized the monotony of this notorious show-piece to represent MacArthur's men or the Japanese or something—and last night Hill Auditorium echoed to a longer-than-average blitzkreig persisting elephantinely all through Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony in a brilliant performance of this work and of the Haydn 88th.

Certainly there can be no doubt of Mr. Koussevitzky's fondness for the Shostakovich, but it seems, to this reviewer at least, that he has espoused an ugly duckling that will never be a swan. There is also no doubt that the symphony has many spots of contemplative beauty and a few of raucous good-nature, but they are far apart and separated by stretches of insignificant noise, illuminated here and there by fifth-rank themes from second-rank composers, notably Tchaikowsky and Sibelius.

THE PROBLEM of simple and direct musical articulation is doubtlessly a difficult one, but I cannot see it being solved by pseudo-exciting programmatic boredom. Tchaikowsky's "1812" is simple enough, but I have never seen it compared to Beethoven, except perhaps to the "Battle" Symphony, which happily is played about once every ten years or so in a fit of morbid curiosity.

Music is not so serious a proposition as war, but that is no reason for going all out for a work because of its historical connection and overdecorating it with significance. The Seventh Symphony, for one thing, has overstepped itself and taken its role entirely too seriously, so that material for fifteen minutes was swollen into shakily epic proportions. Its musical ideas were sparse and they were certainly not helped by the monotonous repetition of the orchestral devices they appeared in.

The performance, however, was a model of feelingly energetic precision and richness. The Boston Symphony, in this respect, lived up to its best traditions and standards, which are high.

The other half of the program was an almost complete delight. All the humor, balance and genuine spirit of Haydn were in Mr. Koussevitzky's performance.

—Chester Kallman

But Boston Orchestra Is Top Rank

Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony Disappoints

Critic Wonders If Much-Acclaimed Soviet Work Will Hold Fame in Distant Future

By Donald Steinfirst

Pittsburgh had its first hearing of the now famous Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch on Saturday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra included it in the first of two memorable concerts given at Syria Mosque under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

No work of music in modern times has received such publicity as this Symphony written by a musician of undoubted ability who was inspired by the flaming defense of Leningrad. The whole world attended in absentia the birth pains of the Symphony in Russia, its enormous success there and elsewhere in Europe, its subsequent trip via microfilm to America, the rather undignified race between some of our leading conductors for the honor of the first American performance. The whole world, too, thrilled to the simultaneous magnificent defense of Leningrad and the majestic attainments of the Russian soldier and peoples throughout their hours of travail. And yet at the risk of being declared a Fifth Columnist, candor compels us to state that, after three hearings, the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony is something less than the musical masterpiece it has been declared. In fact, we wonder if it will not fall into the pattern formed by so many symphonic works likewise inspired by political events. One immediately recalls Beethoven and his "Wellington's Victory" Symphony. When the news of the great French defeat at Vittoria reached Vienna in July of 1813, Beethoven, always on the side of Freedom, straightway produced this "Battle" Symphony to great acclaim. In England it was played nightly, and then as the political significance faded, the music faded, too. Today it is never heard. The history of music is studded with similar events. Will the Shostakovitch Seventh follow this trend?

Aside from the tremendous crescendo at the end of the first movement which has its start in a kernel of a march theme over drums (and this in itself is borrowed from Ravel's Bolero) and a great climax at the very end, the Symphony is often barren and dull. The many empty spaces of the second movement and almost the entire third movement hold little or no musical values, unless of course, one is willing to accept program music per se without an underlying honest musical achievement. This is not to say that there are not some fine moments but practically all the composer has to say is finished when he has reached the end of the first movement. This in itself is a symphony. Nearly all that follows could be safely excised.

Haydn Work Exquisitely Played

Preceding the Shostakovitch on Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky played Haydn's G Major Symphony No. 88 as exquisitely and cheerfully as we have ever heard a Symphony played. What attention to minute details, what refinement in tone, particularly string tone, what rustic humor in the last movement dance, what effects Dr. Koussevitzky gets with his virtuoso group. This little Haydn Symphony is 150 years old. Will the Shostakovitch 7th be heard in the year 2092?

The great elements that go to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first Symphony in the land were all revealed in yesterday's matinee. There was technical perfection, tonal eloquence and interpretative authority in every work played. To begin, there was the delicious music of Corelli's Suite for strings with shimmering tone. This is music of the elegant era, a slow Sarabande, a gay little Gigue where the conductor did not hesitate to use rubato to get the eeffct he wanted and the Badineria played piano throughout.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite which followed is still as clever and witty as when it was first heard several years ago. This is descriptive music that is more than veneer. The pompous imaginary Lieutenant comes to life as the Suite unfolds in a more than superficial manner. After the performance yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky paid special tribute to several soloists particularly the tenor saxaphone, the principal double bass and the off-stage trumpet.

Performance to Treasure

The crowning achievement of the two-day visit of the Orchestra, for this listener at least, was the "Daphnis and Chloe" of Ravel, one of the Bostonian's classic accomplishments in tone color. Here again, Dr. Koussevitzky worked one of his miracles. Restraint was thrown to the winds. Each choir of the orchestra felt the conductorial impact until at the end of the General Dance, there was a crescendo and concluding climax that fairly lifted the audience out of its collective seat. This was a performance to treasure in the memory.

True to its usual custom, the concert concluded with a Tschaikowsky Symphony, in this case, the Fourth. The visiting orchestras have played Symphonies of Tschaikowsky continuously for the last five years and the Miaskovsky Symphony which was originally scheduled would have been most welcome. However, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men played with unusual restraint and the audience was most appreciative.

Koussevitzky In Program Of Classics

By L. A. Sloper

Now that there is peace on the union front, the Boston Symphony Orchestra may employ all the major solo artists it likes. Thus subscribers to the Friday and Saturday series of concerts may enjoy this week the playing of the cellist, Comrade Gregor Piatigorsky, in the Haydn Concerto in D major.

The program of this ninth pair of the season, submitted yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, opens with Corelli's Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie, arranged for string orchestra by Ettore Pinelli, and closes with the Second Symphony of Brahms.

An unusual event, by the way, to find two major works in the same key on a program; but with the differences in style and the minor mode of much of the Brahms, there was no sense of monotony.

This of course is the season for familiar music, with wayfarers who are able to do so returning for the holidays. Next week we shall have Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, Beethoven's Fifth, and two minor items from Rimsky-Korsakoff. Yet these familiar classics from four centuries are welcome relief after a good dosage of new music.

Yesterday Mr. Piatigorsky triumphed again with the Haydn Concerto, in which he was heard here 10 years ago in a commemorative program. His prodigious technique, his vibrant tone, and his musical sensitivity make him always welcome. And the energy he displays in toting his cello back and forth across the stage adds gaiety to any concert.

The orchestral numbers gave us occasion to marvel anew at the brilliant execution, the glorious tone, and the subtle resilience of the orchestra, and at the imagination and the eloquence of the conductor.

Both items gave us also opportunity to ponder the strongly individual interpretations that Dr. Koussevitzky gives the classics. We are accustomed to finding the Tchaikovskyan fire in unexpected places, and yesterday it was noticeable even in Corelli's Sarabande. The sarabande is a slow and stately dance, not as a rule the medium for intense emotion.

In the case of Brahms of course the introduction of violent passion is less surprising. Brahms was a romantic, and an interpretation which brings out his Sturm und Drang is preferable to one which regards him as a musical pedagogue. But yesterday there was so much drama in his measures that one listener was reminded at two different places of Italian opera. From Brahms to Leoncavallo—there's a bridge.

Boston Symphony Concert Rouses Eastman Theater Audience

By NORMAN NAIRN

WHERE is there another orchestra that plays as stunningly as the Boston Symphony?

A visit by Serge Koussevitzky and his musicians to Rochester is a new adventure in sound music. Concerts by the "Boston" usually have been exciting musical experiences, but none, to this reviewer at least, as exciting as their appearance last night in the Eastman Theater. At the conclusion of the much discussed Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovitch the audience rose to its feet to pay tribute to a great conductor, a great orchestra, and a great composer.

Now that the two-year-old battle to unionize the Boston Symphony has been settled, we are grateful once again that this orchestra without a peer can visit Rochester without fear of the sponsoring organization incurring the wrath of unionists. The settlement came as the result of concessions by both orchestra and union, and means the orchestra can resume its broadcasting and recordings, both of which had been barred by the Musicians Union.

'Blitz' Symphony Stunning

Rochester had its first opportunity to hear at first hand the new and prodigious Leningrad or "Blitz" symphony by Shostakovitch, the desire to listen being heightened by the discussion created by the work, as well as because all things Russian are now in high favor. In the words of the composer, the symphony depicts the peaceful Russian life disrupted by war, the early retreat of the Red Army and then a crescendo of victory.

Once before a Russian rout of the invader has served as the theme for classical music, Tschaikowsky basing his "1812 Overture" on Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. But that music was written about a half century after the event which inspired it, whereas Shostakovitch's was composed "on the spot," under a constant rain of bombs and to the accompaniment of the booming of anti-aircraft guns. The Soviet composer wrote it in his native city of Leningrad when Hitler's hordes were tearing at the city's gates, Shostakovitch serving as a fire fighter in the People's Volunteer Army.

Dr. Koussevitzky's opinion is that in the Seventh Symphony Shostakovitch has presented "the greatest appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven." It was perfectly apparent that he was wrapped up in it last night.

It is a stunning, a colossal score, with a wealth of dramatic detail, some audacities and an emotional impact that is well nigh overwhelming. Dr. Koussevitzky's genius for inspiring his men to great things was never here more strikingly evident. Here again were tonal sumptuousness, fortissimo climaxes that were impelling and yet ever musical, string tone as lovely as always in silken transparency and delicacy.

Haydn Music Superlative

Dr. Koussevitzky preceded the heroic Shostakovitch with one of the most charming of the Haydn symphonies, Number 88 in G major. If I'm not mistaken, the Boston Symphony played this lovely work here on its last visit.

Superlatives are in order. It would be impossible to imagine any more gorgeous outpouring of tone than came in the second movement (largo), in the nature of a chorale prelude, the theme of which has since been used as a hymn. In the Finale Haydn again is in high spirits, full of lively sallies, all the instruments gathering together for a grand frolic in which the symphony ends.

It was another concert long to be remembered, as usually are all by the Boston Symphony.

Maybe it was my imagination, but I thought Dr. Koussevitzky's slower tempo in leading the audience in the Star Spangled Banner lent itself to more heartfelt ensemble singing than usually is evident.

Note to Arthur M. See: Many people in the audience would appreciate it if the Eastman mechanics were turned loose to eliminate that rattle in the blower system which was particularly noticeable in all the soft work of the orchestra.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Yesterday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was, in substance and execution, the least enjoyable of the season thus far. The little Corelli Suite for Strings, in arrangement by Ettore Pinelli, is nice enough minor 18th Century music. Haydn's Cello Concerto, which had the services of Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, is about the same, and heaven knows that Brahms' D majoh Symphony is respectable and solid.

But put together upon one program, and played so indifferently as yesterday, the result is insufficient variety and even periodic dullness. There is such a thing as too much standard music for one hearing, even when the conductor is so brilliant an interpreter as Serge Koussevitzky.

Since all things are relative, it is well to observe that yesterday's concert would have been very good for a great many orchestras, but it was below Boston Symphony standards. The strings, though clear, did not have their customary depth and richness in the Corelli Suite, although the Badinerie, the best performed of the three movements, went gracefully and precisely.

Inner voices kept coming momentarily to the surface in the course of the Brahms Symphony, and the tone of tutti passages was thick and unyielding where it should have been blended, lustrous and clear. Yet the latter pages of the Symphony were exciting, and cordial applause followed the irresistible strength of the final chords.

Mr. Piatigorsky, one of this reviewer's favorite cellists, was also somewhat disappointing. His cello tone, usually of fabulous beauty, was dry, almost wiry, and now and again off the pitch. His virtuosity was flawed by technical loose ends both conspicuous and foreign to the artistry of a great master of the cello.

One did admire, nevertheless, the muscularity, the vitality of his interpretation, though he has "sung" melodies more beautifully and passionately than he did in the case of the slow movement. The audience received him enthusiastically.

Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony of Beethoven, and two pieces by Rimsky-Korsakoff: "Night on Mt. Triglaff" and the Spanish Caprice. C. W. D.

Concerts

By force of the calendar, the next regular afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is set for Thursday, Dec. 24. The evening concert will fall on Saturday, Dec. 26. The program comprises Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor, and two Rimsky-Korsakoff pieces—"Night on Mount Triglav," arranged from the opera-ballet, "Mlada," and "Spanish Caprice." Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Chorus To Sing At Carnegie Hall

Invited By Koussevitsky To Appear On Jan 7, 9

The Sarah Lawrence chorus has scored another honor in being invited by Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra to sing with them at two performances in Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 7th and the afternoon of January 9th. About fifty-five girls have signed up to sing the selection "Blessed Damosel" by DeBussey.

Since the performance comes during Christmas vacation, this means that many girls will have to come from considerable distances for that week—for rehearsals will take place on January 4th, 5th and 6th in New York City. Some of the stronger singers among the chorus alumnae have been recruited to make up the members of the chorus. Among this possible list of alumnae are: Audrey Oakley Haynes, Pat Banks Wallower, Jean VanSinderen, Lillian Jacobs, Helen Brown, Marion Schapirro, Marion Crane Graef and Harvette Kutner.

Although the Radcliffe College chorus has done the same selection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Harvard Glee Club has sung at various times under Koussevitsky, Sarah Lawrence is the first college outside of the Boston vicinity to receive such an honor.

"One of the greatest honors any chorus can have is to be invited to sing by Koussevitsky," said Emily Seaman, president of the chorus, "and I think it's—well, it's just plain wonderful!"

MUSIC

FOR SOME REASON, no doubt a secret shared by only a select group of modern composers, Ravel's "Bolero" has become the musically metaphysical basis for the present war. Last Sunday Harl MacDonald's "Baisan," as played by the N.Y. Philharmonic, utilized the monotony of this notorious show-piece to represent MacArthur's men or the Japanese or something—and last night Hill Auditorium echoed to a longer-than-average blitzkreig persisting elephantinely all through Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony in a brilliant performance of this work and of the Haydn 88th.

Certainly there can be no doubt of Mr. Koussevitzky's fondness for the Shostakovich, but it seems, to this reviewer at least, that he has espoused an ugly duckling that will never be a swan. There is also no doubt that the symphony has many spots of contemplative beauty and a few of raucous good-nature, but they are far apart and separated by stretches of insignificant noise, illuminated here and there by fifth-rank themes from second-rank composers, notably Tchaikowsky and Sibelius.

THE PROBLEM of simple and direct musical articulation is doubtlessly a difficult one, but I cannot see it being solved by pseudo-exciting programmatic boredom. Tchaikowsky's "1812" is simple enough, but I have never seen it compared to Beethoven, except perhaps to the "Battle" Symphony, which happily is played about once every ten years or so in a fit of morbid curiosity.

Music is not so serious a proposition as war, but that is no reason for going all out for a work because of its historical connection and overdecorating it with significance. The Seventh Symphony, for one thing, has overstepped itself and taken its role entirely too seriously, so that material for fifteen minutes was swollen into shakily epic proportions. Its musical ideas were sparse and they were certainly not helped by the monotonous repetition of the orchestral devices they appeared in.

The performance, however, was a medal of feelingly energetic precision and richness. The Boston Symphony, in this respect, lived up to its best traditions and standards, which are high.

The other half of the program was an almost complete delight. All the humor, balance and genuine spirit of Haydn were in Mr. Koussevitsky's performance.

—Chester Kallman

But Boston Orchestra Is Top Rank

Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony Disappoints

Critic Wonders If Much-Acclaimed Soviet Work Will Hold Fame in Distant Future

By Donald Steinfirst

Pittsburgh had its first hearing of the now famous Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch on Saturday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra included it in the first of two memorable concerts given at Syria Mosque under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

No work of music in modern times has received such publicity as this Symphony written by a musician of undoubted ability who was inspired by the flaming defense of Leningrad. The whole world attended in absentia the birth pains of the Symphony in Russia, its enormous success there and elsewhere in Europe, its subsequent trip via microfilm to America, the rather undignified race between some of our leading conductors for the honor of the first American performance. The whole world, too, thrilled to the simultaneous magnificent defense of Leningrad and the majestic attainments of the Russian soldier and peoples throughout their hours of travail. And yet at the risk of being declared a Fifth Columnist, candor compels us to state that, after three hearings, the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony is something less than the musical masterpiece it has been declared. In fact, we wonder if it will not fall into the pattern formed by so many symphonic works likewise inspired by political events. One immediately recalls Beethoven and his "Wellington's Victory" Symphony. When the news of the great French defeat at Vittoria reached Vienna in July of 1813, Beethoven, always on the side of Freedom, straightway produced this "Battle" Symphony to great acclaim. In England it was played nightly, and then as the political significance faded, the music faded, too. Today it is never heard. The history of music is studded with similar events. Will the Shostakovitch Seventh follow this trend?

Aside from the tremendous crescendo at the end of the first movement which has its start in a kernel of a march theme over drums (and this in itself is borrowed from Ravel's Bolero) and a great elimax at the very end, the Symphony is often barren and dull. The many empty spaces of the second movement and almost the entire third movement hold little or no musical values, unless of course, one is willing to accept program music per se without an underlying honest musical achievement. This is not to say that there are not some fine moments but practically all the composer has to say is finished when he has reached the end of the first movement. This in itself is a symphony. Nearly all that follows could be safely excised.

Haydn Work Exquisitely Played

Preceding the Shostakovitch on Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky played Haydn's G Major Symphony No. 88 as exquisitely and cheerfully as we have ever heard a Symphony played. What attention to minute details, what refinement in tone, particularly string tone, what rustic humor in the last movement dance, what effects Dr. Koussevitzky gets with his virtuoso group. This little Haydn Symphony is 150 years old. Will the Shostakovitch 7th be heard in the year 2092?

The great elements that go to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first Symphony in the land were all revealed in yesterday's matinee. There was technical perfection, tonal eloquence and interpretative authority in every work played. To begin, there was the delicious music of Corelli's Suite for strings with shimmering tone. This is music of the elegant era, a slow Sarabande, a gay little Gigue where the conductor did not hesitate to use rubato to get the eeffct he wanted and the Badineria played piano throughout.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite which followed is still as clever and witty as when it was first heard several years ago. This is descriptive music that is more than veneer. The pompous imaginary Lieutenant comes to life as the Suite unfolds in a more than superficial manner. After the performance yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky paid special tribute to several soloists particularly the tenor saxaphone, the principal double bass and the off-stage trumpet.

Performance to Treasure

The crowning achievement of the two-day visit of the Orchestra, for this listener at least, was the "Daphnis and Chloe" of Ravel, one of the Bostonian's classic accomplishments in tone color. Here again, Dr. Koussevitzky worked one of his miracles. Restraint was thrown to the winds. Each choir of the orchestra felt the conductorial impact until at the end of the General Dance, there was a crescendo and concluding climax that fairly lifted the audience out of its collective seat. This was a performance to treasure in the memory.

True to its usual custom, the concert concluded with a Tschaikowsky Symphony, in this case, the Fourth. The visiting orchestras have played Symphonies of Tschaikowsky continuously for the last five years and the Miaskovsky Symphony which was originally scheduled would have been most welcome. However, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men played with unusual restraint and the audience was most appreciative.

Koussevitzky In Program Of Classics

By L. A. Sloper

Now that there is peace on the union front, the Boston Symphony Orchestra may employ all the major solo artists it likes. Thus subscribers to the Friday and Saturday series of concerts may enjoy this week the playing of the cellist, Comrade Gregor Piatigorsky, in the Haydn Concerto in D major.

The program of this ninth pair of the season, submitted yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, opens with Corelli's Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie, arranged for string orchestra by Ettore Pinelli, and closes with the Second Symphony of Brahms.

An unusual event, by the way, to find two major works in the same key on a program; but with the differences in style and the minor mode of much of the Brahms, there was no sense of monotony.

This of course is the season for familiar music, with wayfarers who are able to do so returning for the holidays. Next week we shall have Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, Beethoven's Fifth, and two minor items from Rimsky-Korsakoff. Yet these familiar classics from four centuries are welcome relief after a good dosage of new music.

Yesterday Mr. Piatigorsky triumphed again with the Haydn Concerto, in which he was heard here 10 years ago in a commemorative program. His prodigious technique, his vibrant tone, and his musical sensitivity make him always welcome. And the energy he displays in toting his cello back and forth across the stage adds gaiety to any concert.

The orchestral numbers gave us occasion to marvel anew at the brilliant execution, the glorious tone, and the subtle resilience of the orchestra, and at the imagination and the eloquence of the conductor.

Both items gave us also opportunity to ponder the strongly individual interpretations that Dr. Koussevitzky gives the classics. We are accustomed to finding the Tchaikovskyan fire in unexpected places, and yesterday it was noticeable even in Corelli's Sarabande. The sarabande is a slow and stately dance, not as a rule the medium for intense emotion.

In the case of Brahms of course the introduction of violent passion is less surprising. Brahms was a romantic, and an interpretation which brings out his Sturm und Drang is preferable to one which regards him as a musical pedagogue. But yesterday there was so much drama in his measures that one listener was reminded at two different places of Italian opera. From Brahms to Leoncavallo—there's a bridge.

Boston Symphony Concert Rouses Eastman Theater Audience

By NORMAN NAIRN

WHERE is there another orchestra that plays as stunningly as the Boston Symphony?

A visit by Serge Koussevitzky and his musicians to Rochester is a new adventure in sound music. Concerts by the "Boston" usually have been exciting musical experiences, but none, to this reviewer at least, as exciting as their appearance last night in the Eastman Theater. At the conclusion of the much discussed Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovitch the audience rose to its feet to pay tribute to a great conductor, a great orchestra, and a great composer.

Now that the two-year-old battle to unionize the Boston Symphony has been settled, we are grateful once again that this orchestra without a peer can visit Rochester without fear of the sponsoring organization incurring the wrath of unionists. The settlement came as the result of concessions by both orchestra and union, and means the orchestra can resume its broadcasting and recordings, both of which had been barred by the Musicians Union.

'Blitz' Symphony Stunning

Rochester had its first opportunity to hear at first hand the new and prodigious Leningrad or "Blitz" symphony by Shostakovitch, the desire to listen being heightened by the discussion created by the work, as well as because all things Russian are now in high favor. In the words of the composer, the symphony depicts the peaceful Russian life disrupted by war, the early retreat of the Red Army and then a crescendo of victory.

Once before a Russian rout of the invader has served as the theme for classical music, Tschaikowsky basing his "1812 Overture" on Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. But that music was written about a half century after the event which inspired it, whereas Shostakovitch's was composed "on the spot," under a constant rain of bombs and to the accompaniment of the booming of anti-aircraft guns. The Soviet composer wrote it in his native city of Leningrad when Hitler's hordes were tearing at the city's gates, Shostakovitch serving as a fire fighter in the People's Volunteer Army.

Dr. Koussevitzky's opinion is that in the Seventh Symphony Shostakovitch has presented "the greatest appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven." It was perfectly apparent that he was wrapped up in it last night.

It is a stunning, a colossal score, with a wealth of dramatic detail, some audacities and an emotional impact that is well nigh overwhelming. Dr. Koussevitzky's genius for inspiring his men to great things was never here more strikingly evident. Here again were tonal sumptuousness, fortissimo climaxes that were impelling and yet ever musical, string tone as lovely as always in silken transparency and delicacy.

Haydn Music Superlative

Dr. Koussevitzky preceded the heroic Shostakovitch with one of the most charming of the Haydn symphonies, Number 88 in G major. If I'm not mistaken, the Boston Symphony played this lovely work here on its last visit.

Superlatives are in order. It would be impossible to imagine any more gorgeous outpouring of tone than came in the second movement (largo), in the nature of a chorale prelude, the theme of which has since been used as a hymn. In the Finale Haydn again is in high spirits, full of lively sallies, all the instruments gathering together for a grand frolic in which the symphony ends.

It was another concert long to be remembered, as usually are all by the Boston Symphony.

Maybe it was my imagination, but I thought Dr. Koussevitzky's slower tempo in leading the audience in the Star Spangled Banner lent itself to more heartfelt ensemble singing than usually is evident.

Note to Arthur M. See: Many people in the audience would appreciate it if the Eastman mechanics were turned loose to eliminate that rattle in the blower system which was particularly noticeable in all the soft work of the orchestra.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Yesterday's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was, in substance and execution, the least enjoyable of the season thus far. The little Corelli Suite for Strings, in arrangement by Ettore Pinelli, is nice enough minor 18th Century music. Haydn's Cello Concerto, which had the services of Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, is about the same, and heaven knows that Brahms' D majoh Symphony is respectable and solid.

But put together upon one program, and played so indifferently as yesterday, the result is insufficient variety and even periodic dullness. There is such a thing as too much standard music for one hearing, even when the conductor is so brilliant an interpreter as Serge Koussevitzky.

Since all things are relative, it is well to observe that yesterday's concert would have been very good for a great many orchestras, but it was below Boston Symphony standards. The strings, though clear, did not have their customary depth and richness in the Corelli Suite, although the Badinerie, the best performed of the three movements, went gracefully and precisely.

Inner voices kept coming momentarily to the surface in the course of the Brahms Symphony, and the tone of tutti passages was thick and unyielding where it should have been blended, lustrous and clear. Yet the latter pages of the Symphony were exciting, and cordial applause followed the irresistible strength of the final chords.

Mr. Piatigorsky, one of this reviewer's favorite cellists, was also somewhat disappointing. His cello tone, usually of fabulous beauty, was dry, almost wiry, and now and again off the pitch. His virtuosity was flawed by technical loose ends both conspicuous and foreign to the artistry of a great master of the cello.

One did admire, nevertheless, the muscularity, the vitality of his interpretation, though he has "sung" melodies more beautifully and passionately than he did in the case of the slow movement. The audience received him enthusiastically.

Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony of Beethoven, and two pieces by Rimsky-Korsakoff: "Night on Mt. Triglaff" and the Spanish Caprice. C. W. D.

Concerts

By force of the calendar, the next regular afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is set for Thursday, Dec. 24. The evening concert will fall on Saturday, Dec. 26. The program comprises Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor, and two Rimsky-Korsakoff pieces—"Night on Mount Triglav," arranged from the opera-ballet, "Mlada," and "Spanish Caprice." Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Piatigorsky's 'Cello Superb As Feature of Symphony

Herald Dec 19

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave the ninth concert of its 63d season in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Corelli
Sarabande, Gigue and Bardinerie, Arr. for string orchestra by Pinelli

Haydn
Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, D major

Brahms
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73

After its fine orgy of French music a fortnight ago, the Boston Symphony returned from its "western" tour yesterday in a programmatically conventional mood to play three compositions, all of which have been heard here within the last three years. As they were all beautifully played and are, in any case, beautiful in themselves, it all stacked up to a pleasant concert made additionally so by the superb solo performance on the 'cello of Gregor Piatigorsky.

The true measure of a musician's stature is certainly to be re revealed in his performance of a composition he has done a thousand times. Perhaps Mr. Piatigorsky hasn't played the Haydn D major Concerto quite that many times (he's probably lost count!), but every note, every bar and every phrase must be first nature to him inasmuch as they are second nature to practically everybody else. Yet he goes at it every time as thought its true meaning and beauty had just been revealed to him in communion with the gods. The result—and it is no exaggeration—is a revelation and a marvel.

Aside from his technical command of his instrument—and possibly barring Pablo Casals he has no equal today—he brings a remarkable musical feeling to bear. Thus the concerto was filled with miracles of phrasing, with singular beauties of legato, and with subtle changes of timbre and dynamics. Although his fingering was wond rounds, his bowing was of especial distinction, and he drew phrase after phrase with one bow stroke, a feat explaining the sheen and balance of his tone.

Nor can his stage personality be overlooked as a factor contributing to his effectiveness as a performer. His bearing as he strides onto the stage is in itself commanding, and he is probably the only musician in the country who can gallop off the stage four steps at a time and convey the impression that it is all a part of the interpretation of the music. As always, he was given a fine secondo performance by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky and, also as always, he drew an ovation.

There seems little necessity to revive the old controversy about the authorship of the work itself. Maybe Haydn didn't write it (and truth to tell it isn't especially charcteristic of him), and maybe Kraft did write it. It matters not at all, for it remains a most agreeable though not weighty composition and will doubtless remain the wheelhorse for all cellists for some time to come.

The selection of pieces from Corelli seems to be one of Dr. Koussevitzky's especial delights and it certainly is cirtually custom-made for the strings of the Boston Symphony. Although they got off to a slightly sketchy start in the Sarabande, they recovered after the first few bars and went on to achieve one of their well-known miracles of unity and balance. The same, to a certain extent, held true of the Brahms, although it wanted occasionally for smoother attacks. As an interpretation by the conductor, however, it was a fine piece of work, unmarred by over-inflated climaxes or disregard for its essentially intimate style. Of the four movements, only the last allows for any of the grand manner, and of this Dr. Koussevitzky was fully awre. Thus the performance was suitably restrained and dignified while having just the proper go. The program next week consists of rokofieff's Classical Symphony, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Night on Mount Triglav" and Capriccio Espagnol. The first concert of the pair, mind you, takes place on Thursday afternoon.

PIATIGORSKY WITH SYMPHONY

Post Dec 19

Russian 'Cellist Soloist in Haydn's Concerto

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Back from a strenuous Western trip the Symphony Orchestra is offering this week a short and untaxing programme, though not in every respect the one that was originally announced. Instead of Mozart's Symphony in E-flat this list offers as its second item Haydn's 'Cello Concerto in D major with Gregor Piatigorsky as the soloist. Had the orchestra not joined the union, it is fairly safe to say that Mr. Piatigorsky would not have been allowed to play with it, so we may call this one fortunate result of the new dispensation. The first number, to get back to the programme, was the now familiar Suite for Strings, made by Ettore Pinelli from the Sonatas of Corelli, and the third and final piece, that hardy perennial, the Second Symphony of Brahms.

While the purists might prefer their Corelli straight, the Pinelli transcription makes pleasant listening. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky was minded to play the Sarabande so slowly that its melody was virtually unrecognizable. As on some other occasions, he sacrificed tune for tone and the tone of the Boston Symphony strings was here something to marvel at. The Gigue and Badinerie, however, gave unalloyed enjoyment.

No less delightful was the Haydn Concerto. Upon the prodigious powers of Mr. Piatigorsky it laid no heavy burden, but that is not to say that we could expect any other 'cellist to play it in just the way that he did. There was also the requisite sympathy between soloist and conductor and when to these things were added the intrinsic charm of the music itself, the listener's cup was running over. Some authorities, including Sir Donald Tovey, are persuaded that not Haydn but his pupil, Anton Kraft, was the composer of this work. But surely it is worthy of Haydn himself and, as Mr Burk's notes put it, "the burden of proof would rest with those who question its authenticity." A giant in stature, Mr. Piatigorsky, returning many times to the platform, waved his instrument aloft as unconcernedly as though it had been a violin, and to the amusement of all and sundry.

The danger in playing or conducting a piece too often is that one is inclined to do things to it. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky did plenty to Brahm's Symphony. In the first movement particularly, there were disturbing fluctuations of tempo, yet we are told that one of Brahms' virtues was his ability to maintain the steady momentum of the classical symphony. This performance painted him as a capricious romanticist. Again, some have imagined that the sonorous keynote of this symphony was a golden euphony. Not that such euphony was altogether absent, much of the time it was there in abundance, but more than once there was a most un-Brahmsian coarseness and stridency in the brass. The final climax, whipped up to a near frenzy, brought down the house.

152

EL PASO, TEXAS
HERALD-POST
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER
HOUSTON, TEX.
PRESS
APR 2 - 1942
PEORIA, ILL.
JOURNAL TRANSCRIPT
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS
PENSACOLA, FLA.
NEWS
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
ZANESVILLE, OHIO SIGNAL
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST
EVANSVILLE, IND.
PRESS
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS CALLER BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
FORT SMITH, ARK.
TIMES-RECORD
WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
TWIN CITY SENTINEL
CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
RENO, NEV.
STATE JOURNAL
CINCINNATI, O.
POST
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES
PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
SENTINEL
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
ELKINS, W. VA.
INTERMOUNTAIN
READING, PA.
TIMES

APR 3 - 1942

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
FORT WORTH, TEX.
PRESS
CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
EXPONENT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS
HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE REGISTER
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

APR 3 - 1942

MY DAY

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

WASHINGTON, Wednesday—This has been a busy day. Mr. Koussevitsky, who conducted the concert for the benefit of Russian relief last night, and Mrs. Edward Watson, came to lunch. I was delighted to hear that he hopes to continue the music school in Stockbridge, Mass., this summer and already has 400 applications.

Mrs. Roosevelt

I was afraid that the tire shortage and similar problems might keep people from attending the concerts, but perhaps trains and buses can be used. Certainly, music-loving people will make every effort to be there, for there is no more delightful spot in which to enjoy music.

Two groups of young people, who are visiting Washington, were received during the afternoon. I only hope that these young people get a sense of the way in which everyone is working in Washington, for it will give them a realization of the need for their own participation in the war effort where they live.

At tea time, Dr. and Mrs. Edward Endicott Peabody came in, and it was a joy to see them both. Miss Ruth F. Woodsmall also came in to talk over her trip. She is leaving today on an extended tour to Mexico and South America to represent the Y. W. C. A. She spent much time before in Europe and the Far East and is familiar with the work done by the Y. W. C. A. the world over.

The effort to make Y. W. C. A. work more valuable to our neighbors to the south of us and to bring closer understanding between the Protestant organizations and all existing organizations now working in these countries, should be of great value in developing better understanding, especially among the women.

Miss Woodsmall is traveling by air and it was interesting to reflect how much a year has changed our point of view. We used to think that air travel, especially over the ocean, was somewhat hazardous. Today it is looked upon as being far safer than any passenger steamer.

Last night, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, who is staying with us, Mrs. Cameron Clark, Mr. Walter Thayer Jr., and Mr. David Bruce, came to dine with me, and then we went to the concert given for Russian relief. We enjoyed every minute of it, and I was so happy I could be back in Washington to attend it.

I am returning to New York City this morning, for I am going to be busy there for several days, sorting and packing.

E. R.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
APR 1 - 1942

U. S. and Soviet Anthems Included In Russian Concert in DAR Hall

By RUTH COWAN

Washington, March 31—(AP)—A strange, almost unbelievable event, a bit hard on ghosts, took place tonight on the banks of the Potomac.

"The Internationale," the Soviet national anthem, was played in Constitution hall, which is owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution who many times have denounced the Communist philosophy the rallying song commemorates.

The occasion was the Boston symphony concert for the benefit of the Russian war relief. The event was not sponsored by the DAR, which merely made its hall available. The list of patrons was headed by the President and Mrs Roosevelt, the Vice-President and Mrs Wallace.

One Exception

There were important names and important wealth in the sell-out audience that came to hear Serge Koussevitzky conduct the 115-piece orchestra in a program all-Russian with but one exception—"The Star Spangled Banner."

The American national anthem opened the concert, and standing to hear were Mrs Roosevelt and a party from the White House in box 13, which is considered by some historians to be Uncle Sam's lucky number because there were 13 original colonies.

Directly across the House was the box reserved for the Russian embassador, Maxim Litvinoff, and Mrs Litvinoff. Their national anthem was played after that of the United States.

The diplomatic colony turned out. There was a box reserved by the British embassador, Lord Halifax, and Lady Halifax. In the audience—the hall seats 3844—were names top-notch in society and in politics.

Koussevitzky, now an American citizen but born a Russian, and the orchestra members contributed their performance. Some box tickets brought from $50 to $100.

Especially Orchestrated

The Internationale, a revolutionary marching song older than the Soviet union, was orchestrated especially for this concert by Aaron Copland, modern American composer, of New York. Koussevitzky found there was no official version suitable for a large orchestra.

The orchestra played the sixth symphony by Dimitri Shostakovich, who is an air raid warden in Leningrad. It had been hoped to play his latest symphony, the seventh, which he composed while serving in a fire brigade during the Nazi siege of Leningrad, but it was impossible to get the score in time.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER
APR 1 - 942

CUMBERLAND, MD.
NEWS
DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
Dallas One
Statesman
YORK, PA.
GAZETTE & DAILY
ENID, OKLA.
NEWS
APR 1 1942

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR
TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
PITTSBURG, KAN.
SUN
JOHNSTOWN, PA.
DEMOCRAT
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
HAGERSTOWN, MD.
HERALD
MURFREESBORO, TENN.
NEWS JOURNAL
RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
TORONTO, CANADA GLOBE & MAIL
UTICA, N.Y.
PRESS
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SUN
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR STAUNTON, VA.
NEWS LEADER
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
NORWICH, N. Y.
SUN
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES
HAGERSTOWN, MD.
MAIL
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
Rockford Ill
Star
TWIN FALLS, IDAHO
NEWS
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS
APR 1 1942

STRASBURG, VA.
Northern Virginia Daily
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
COLUMBUS, GA.
ENQUIRER
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
JOURNAL
AMARILLO, TEX.
NEWS
PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
CEDAR RAPIDS, IA.
GAZETTE
WHEELING, W. VA.
INTELLIGENCER
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
SCOTTSBLUFF, NEB.
STAR HERALD
KANSAS CITY, MO.
TIMES
LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
TWIN FALLS, IDAHO
NEWS
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
BLUEFIELD, W. VA.
TELEGRAPH
CHAMPAIGN, ILL.
NEWS-GAZETTE
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL
JEFFERSON CITY, MO.
CAPITAL NEWS
COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
GAZETTE
OWATONNA, MINN.
PEOPLE'S PRESS
BRISTOL, VA.
HERALD-COURIER
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD
MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
WILLIAMSPORT, PA.
GAZETTE-BULLETIN
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
EASTON, PA.
FREE PRESS
AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE
APR 1 1942

COLUMBUS, OHIO DISPATCH
APR 1 - 1942

153

Constitution Hall Crowd Cheers Soviet Banner at Relief Meeting

By Ruth Cowan

WASHINGTON, APRIL 1.—(AP).—It really did happen, and 4000 people today can testify that it did.

Amid applause from a fashionable audience, the Red banner of Soviet Russia was brought onto the platform of Constitution Hall, built and owned by outspoken opponents of Communism, the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The presentation of the flags of the 26 United Nations—the Soviet banner among them—was an impressive high spot on the Russian relief program given last night by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and for this contest, brilliant in content and in attendance, the sponsors rented the stronghold of the DAR, the capital's only large auditorium.

Included in the rental fee were ushers with DAR armbands. They stood at attention as did Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet ambassador; Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the audience as Serge Koussevitzky conducted the playing of the Internationale and the Star Spangled Banner.

It was the first time that the Soviet national anthem had been played in the American capital by a major orchestra, and certainly the first time by anyone from the platform of Constitution Hall.

To the Soviet ambassador and his English-born wife, the playing of the Internationale was a dramatic moment. Both squared their shoulders at the opening trains. The ambassador pursed his lips. Madame Litvinoff looked out over the audience, solemn and intent.

"It was thrilling to hear it played by that big orchestra," said Madame Litvinoff afterward back stage as she and the ambassador waited to greet Koussevitzky during an intermission. "The times I've heard it played in the Red Square in Moscow!"

Fan Gift of Mrs. Sayre

Madame Litvinoff wore a crepe turquoise gown with a corsage of nasturtiums. She carried a fan the color of the flowers, and she related it had been given her by Mrs. Francis Sayre, wife of the U. S. high commissioner in the Philippines, when the Litvinoffs stopped at Manila en route to the United States just ahead of the Jap attack.

"I decided I wouldn't carry the fan until I heard that Mrs. Sayre was safe," said Madame Litvinoff. "Tonight I can use it." Sayre recently arrived in Washington and it is understood that his wife is coming here shortly.

The list of patrons was headed by President Roosevelt, who seldom lends his name to a cause and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Chatting during intermission Tuesday night at a Boston symphony concert for the benefit of Russian war relief, left to right, Senator Alben W. Barkley (D.) Kentucky; Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies and Maxim Litvinoff, Russian ambassador to the U. S. A feature of the concert held in Constitution hall was the playing of the Internationale, Soviet national anthem.—(AP). Wirephoto.

PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
MINOT, N. D.
NEWS ANTIGO, WIS.
JOURNAL
PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
GRAND ISLAND, NEB.
INDEPENDENT PETALUMA, CALIF.
ARGUS COURIER
MEDFORD, ORE.
MAIL TRIBUNE
CALDWELL, IDAHO
NEWS - TRIBUNE
LINCOLN, NEB.
STAR
HUNTSVILLE, ALA.
TIMES
PRATT, KAN.
TRIBUNE
MURFREESBORO, TENN.
NEWS JOURNAL
RAPID CITY, S. D.
JOURNAL
MARSHFIELD, WIS.
NEWS-HERALD
VICKSBURG, MISS.
POST
GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.
SENTINEL
TARRYTOWN, N. Y.
NEWS
HORNELL, N. Y.
TRIBUNE
IDAHO FALLS, IDAHO
EVE. POST-REGISTER
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
APR 1 - 1942

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL
WILLMAR, MINN.
TRIBUNE
CLOVIS, N. M.
NEWS-JOURNAL
MERIDIAN, MISS.
STAR
FAIRMONT, MINN.
SENTINEL
TAMPA, FLA.
TIMES
WATERTOWN, S. D.
PUBLIC OPINION
Corpus Christi, Tex
Times
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CALL BULLETIN
BAY CITY, MICH.
TIMES
MONROE, WIS.
EVENING TIMES
PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGON JOURNAL
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
HERALD-EXPRESS
UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
OSWEGO, N. Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES
GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS-GAZETTE
JACKSONVILLE, ILL.
COURIER
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
APR 1 - 1942

FAYETTEVILLE, ARK.
NORTHWEST ARK.
TIMES
ROCK ISLAND, ILL.
ARGUS
COLUMBIA, MO.
TRIBUNE
BELLINGHAM, WASH.
HERALD
OCALA, FLA.
STAR
PORT ANGELES, WASH.
NEWS
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
WAUSAU, WIS.
RECORD-HERALD
CHIPPEWA FALLS, WIS.
HERALD-TELEGRAM
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN
ABERDEEN, S. D.
NEWS
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
FREEPORT, ILL.
JOURNAL STANDARD
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
SAGINAW, MICH.
NEWS
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD-STATESMAN
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
READING, PA.
EAGLE
ROCKFORD, ILL.
REGISTER-REPUBLIC
La Crosse Tribune
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
ROSEBURG, ORE.
NEWS - REVIEW
BENTON HARBOR, MICH.
NEWS-PALLADIUM
DULUTH, MINN.
HERALD
LONGMONT, COLO.
TIMES-CALL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
ABERDEEN, WASH.
WORLD
LONGVIEW, WASH.
NEWS
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN
ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
PRESS
OGDEN, UTAH STANDARD EXAMINER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
APR 1 - 1942

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS-SUN
MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS-SCIMITAR
DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
GRAND HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE
CAIRO, ILL.
CITIZEN & BULLETIN
EL PASO, TEXAS
HERALD-POST
SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
NEWS
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
MICHIGAN CITY, IND.
NEWS-DISPATCH
MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN-REGISTER
MUSKEGON, MICH.
CHRONICLE
KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
ST. JOSEPH, MICH.
HERALD PRESS
LA SALLE, ILL.
POST-TRIBUNE
TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
LAFAYETTE, LA.
ADVERTISER
AUBURN, N. Y.
CITIZEN-ADVERTISER
STEVENS PT., WIS.
JOURNAL
MT. CARMEL, ILL.
Republican-Register
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.
LEADER
MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS
FLORENCE, ALA.
TIMES
BLOOMINGTON, ILL.
PANTAGRAPH
TAYLORSVILLE, ILL.
BREEZE
MANDAN, N. D.
PIONEER
WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
IOWA CITY, IOWA PRESS CITIZEN
TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
FARGO, N. D.
EVENING FORUM
LAKELAND, FLA.
LEDGER & STAR TELEGRAM
DAVENPORT, IA.
TIMES
SALEM, ORE.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
WINONA, MINN.
REPUBLICAN HERALD
FORT DODGE, IOWA
MESSENGER-CHRONICLE
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
NEWS-FREE PRESS
EAU CLAIRE, WIS.
TELEGRAM
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
APR 1 - 1942

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
BEE

APR 1 - 1942

Red Flag, Internationale Are At Home In Constitution Hall

By RUTH COWAN

WASHINGTON, April 1.—(AP)—It really did happen, and 4,000 people today can testify that it did.

Amid applause from a fashionable audience, the red banner of Soviet Russia was brought onto the platform of Constitution Hall, built and owned by outspoken opponents of Communism, the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The presentation of the flags of the twenty six United Nations--the Soviet banner among them--was an impressive high spot on the Russian war relief program given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and for this concert, brilliant in content and in attendance, the sponsors rented the stronghold of the DAR, the capital's only large auditorium.

Stand At Attention

Included in the rental fee were ushers with DAR armbands. They stood at attention as did Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet ambassador; Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the audience as Serge Koussevitzky conducted the playing of the Internationale and the Star Spangled Banner.

It was the first time the Soviet national anthem has been played in the American capital by a major orchestra, and certainly the first time by anyone from the platform of Constitution Hall.

Thrill To Litvinoffs

To the Soviet Ambassador's English born wife, the playing of the Internationale was a dramatic moment. Both squared their shoulders at the opening strains. The ambassador pursed his lips. Madame Litvinoff looked out over the audience, solemn and intent.

"It was thrilling to hear it played by that big orchestra," said Madame Litvinoff afterward back stage as she and the ambassador waited to greet Koussevitzky during an intermission. "The times I've heard it played in the Red Square in Moscow!"

Carried Sayre Fan

Madame Litvinoff wore a crepe turqoise gown with a corsage of nasturtiums. She carried a fan the color of the flowers, and she related it had been given her by Mrs. Francis Sayre, wife of the United States high commissioner in the Philippines, when the Litvinoffs stopped in Manila en route to the United States just ahead of the Japanese attack.

"I decided I wouldn't carry the fan until I heard Mrs. Sayre was safe," said Madame Litvinoff. "Tonight I can use it." Sayre recently arrived in Washington and it is understood his wife is coming here shortly.

The list of patrons was headed by President Roosevelt, who seldom lends his name to a cause, and Mrs. Roosevelt.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

FERGUS FALLS, MINN.
DAILY JOURNAL

HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
ADVERTISER

VIRGINIA, MINN.
ENTERPRISE

ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN

HENDERSON, KY.
EVENING JOURNAL

ANDERSON, S. C.
DAILY MAIL

DIXON, ILL.
TELEGRAPH

QUINCY, ILL.
HERALD-WHIG

URBANA, ILL.
COURIER

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD

ST. CLOUD, MINN.
TIMES

ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN

PANAMA CITY, FLA.
NEWS-HERALD

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS

ELGIN, ILL.
COURIER NEWS

CALUMET, MICH.
NEWS-JOURNAL

DENVER, COLO.
POST

APPLETON, WIS.
POST CRESCENT

SUMTER, S. C.
ITEM

DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES HERALD

DAVENPORT, IA.
TIMES

PEORIA, ILL.
JOURNAL TRANSCRIPT

POPULAR BLUFF, MO.
AMERICAN REPUBLIC

BRADENTON, FLA.
HERALD

LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL

SPRINGFIELD, MO.
LEADER AND PRESS

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

STERLING, ILL.
GAZETTE

AUGUSTA, GA.
HERALD

BROOKLYN N. Y.
TABLET

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

WASHINGTON, D.C
SUNDAY STAR
3/15/42

Music in the Air

Boxes Taken for Russian Relief Concert

"She shall have music wherever she goes" is true of Washington's hostesses today, when so many social events center around concerts or musicales. Some are benefits, such as the concert for Russian Relief that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give March 31, and the recital Alice Blengsli will present for the benefit of torpedoed Norwegian seamen. Then there are the regular concert evenings such as the one today by the National Symphony and that to be given Tuesday evening by the Philadelphia Orchestra. If that isn't enough musical entertainment, Washingtonians may go over to Baltimore for the Metropolitan Opera's three-day season which begins tomorrow.

The Norwegian benefit recital by the attractive Scandinavian-American concert and radio pianist will be held March 26 in the Wardman Park Theater, and will be sponsored by the Norwegian Society of Washington.

Many prominent Washingtonians already have made reservations for boxes for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert on the 31st. The President has given his name as a patron for the affair. This in itself is unusual, for although Mrs. Roosevelt often heads the lists of patrons and patronesses for various benefits, the President seldom permits the use of his name for social affairs other than the birthday balls for the relief of infantile paralysis victims.

Among the more recent reservations made for the concert, which will be under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and which will be held in Constitution Hall, are Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, wife of Mr. Justice Roberts; the Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon, the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, wife of the Undersecretary of Commerce; Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Orme Wilson, Miss Mabel Boardman and Mr. Max Truitt, who has taken two boxes.

Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, who is vice chairman of the committee for the Russian Relief benefit, of which Mrs. Joseph E. Davies is chairman, has appointed Mrs. A. K. Payne to be in charge of box reservations. Other reservations can be made at C. C. Cappel's box office.

Efrem Zimbalist will be guest artist with the Philadelphia Orchestra when it appears Tuesday evening. This event, like the appearance of the Boston Orchestra, will draw numerous diplomats, officials and members of residential society to Constitution Hall. Members of the staff of the Mexican Embassy will appear in a group to hear Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico," which is scheduled for the second part of the program.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Senhora de Martins will have guests in their box as will Mr. Justice and Mrs. Roberts. Miss Boardman will entertain friends in her box. Her sister, Mrs. F. A. Keep, will be in an adjoining box.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

APR 19 1942

Interest Increases In Forthcoming Russian Benefit

Interest in the brilliant Russian Relief benefit concert which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Washington Tuesday, March 31, is increasing, spreading to every circle of American and diplomatic groups. Among the latest who have taken boxes for this event are Bernard Baruch, Maj. Gen. Chu of the Chinese Embassy, the Canadian Minister and Mrs. Leighton McCarthy, Nelson Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Berle and Mrs. William Levis.

The U. S. Supreme Court will be well represented as Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts and Justice and Mrs. James F. Byrnes are sharing a box.

Lord and Lady Halifax have taken seats and other recent reservations include Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai, Agent General for India; the New Zealand Minister and Mrs. Walter Nash; the Yugoslav Minister and Mme. Fotitch; and the Greek Minister and Mme. Diamantopolous. Earlier the Czecho-Slovak Minister and Mme. Hurban took a block of seats.

Still other reservations have been made by Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Batt, Postmaster General and Mrs. Frank Walker, Corcoran Thom, Mrs. Charles Warren, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Warden Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Hoyer-Miller of the British Embassy staff, and Mr. Prentiss Coonley.

Mrs. A. K. Payne, of 2205 California Street Northwest, has been put in charge of box reservations by Mrs. Joseph Davies, chairman for the concert. She can be reached by telephone at Hobart 0210.

The Minister of Australia and Mrs. Casey wrote Mrs. Davies that they regretted they would be out of town the date of the concert and, as they could not use seats would send instead a contribution for the benefit fund, which they did.

GRANTS PASS, ORE.
COURIER

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
DAILY TIMES

APR 1 - 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

FEB 17 1942

Heads Benefit for Russians

Mrs. Joseph E. Davis, wealthy wife of the former Ambassador to Russia, heads a committee which will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall March 31 in a benefit concert for Russian War Relief.

Frances Nash Watson, concert pianist and wife of the President's aide, Gen. Edwin Watson, is vice chairman. The meeting announcing the event was held at her home.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. It will be the orchestra's first concert in Washington in a number of years.

Russian War Relief Inc. is recognized by the President's Committee on War Relief Agencies as an unofficial agency thru which medical supplies, surgical instruments and new clothes can be sent by personal gift to Russia.

ANNAPOLIS, MD.
CAPITAL

MAR 18 1942

Carters Return From Boston

Mr. an dMrs. Elliott Carter have returned to Annapolis from Boston where they heard one of Mr. Carter's compositions played by Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

The same music will be played in April at the New York Town Hall by the Boston orchestra and Mr. Koussevitsky.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

FEB 17 1942

Boston Orchestra To Give Concert In Washington

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, is to make its first appearance for several years at the nation's capital in Constitution Hall, March 31 for Russian war relief.

The announcement was made today after a special meeting at the home of Mrs. Edward M Watson, who is vice-chairman of the Washington committee for this event. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have offered the services of the organization for the special Washington concert.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former United States ambassador to Russia, has accepted the chairmanship of this committee. Mrs. Emory Land is serving with Mrs. Watson as vice-chairman.

Russian War Relief, Inc., is an American organization, recognized by the President's committee on war relief agencies as an entirely unofficial agency through which the personal gifts of the American people can be channeled to the civilians and soldiers in the Soviet Union. Its president is Edward C. Carter, summer resident of Lee who attended the meeting at Mrs. Watson's home.

ROCKVILLE, MD
INDEPENDENT
3/12/42

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Washington Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, is to make its first appearance in several years in the nation's capital in a notable concert, in Constitution Hall, Tuesday evening, March 31, and the concert will be for the benefit of Russian War Relief.

The announcement was made after a special meeting at the home of Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, who is vice chairman of the Washington Committee for this event. The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have offered the services of the famous organization for the special Washington concert of national significance.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the distinguished former United States Ambassador to Russia, has accepted the chairmanship of this committee and, with Mrs. Watson's assistance, is forming a full committee and list of patrons for this brilliant event. Mrs. Emory Land is serving with Mrs. Watson as a vice chairman of the committee.

Dr. Koussevitsky has embraced the opportunity to assist in the relief of the country of his birth, which, by its heroic part in the war, now holds the attention of the world.

Russian War Relief, Inc., is an American organization, recognized by the President's Committee on War Relief Agencies as an entirely unofficial agency through which the personal gifts of the American people can be channeled to the brave civilians and soldiers in the Soviet Union. It has been sending principally medical supplies, surgical instruments and new clothes to Russia. Its President, Mr. Edward C. Carter, who attended the meeting at Mrs Watson's home, explained that Russian War Relief, Inc., was not organized because of any appeal for aid from the Soviet Union, but grew out of a spontaneous expression on the part of Americans in every part of the United States. These people who had recognized the invaluable aid which British War Relief and United China Relief had given felt that in addition to official government aid, Americans must express their own deep indebtedness to the people of the Soviet Union by a generous outpouring of private help. The Board of Directors of Russian War Relief, Inc., includes: Allen Wardwell, who accompanied Mr. W. Averell Harriman on his recent mission to Moscow; Clark H. Minor, president of the International General Electric; Reeve Schley, vice-president of the Chase National Bank. Pierre Jay, chairman of the board of the Fiduciary Trust Company of New York, is the national treasurer. William L. Batt is the honorary chairman of the Philadelphia Committee.

Mr. C. C. Cappel will be local manager for the concert. Reservations can be made now at his concert bureau in Ballard's 1340 G Street, N. W. 2500 of the 3800 seats are to be at regular concert prices to permit the most repre

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
FEB 28 1942

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies Hasn't Forgotten Russia

Wife of Former Ambassador Directing Relief Concert

By PATRICIA COFFIN.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies—whose husband, former Ambassador to Russia, is Co-ordinator of Relief Societies and author of the best seller, Mission to Moscow—knows what the score is. A handsome woman, and, incidentally one of the wealthiest in the world, she is a tonic to meet. Her speech, tangy with the flavor of the Middle West where she was born, flows with exuberance. Faultlessly groomed, she gives an impression of vitality and joie de vivre, due partly, no doubt, to her eating habits.

"I'm a food crank," she admitted this week, "and a coffee fiend. Funny, isn't it?—when my father invented Postum as a substitute for coffee." Her food is without frills, she dotes on vegetable juices. A queenly woman with a crown of graying black hair dramatically streaked with white, Mrs. Davies' manner is animated, her smile flashing and her blue eyes a-twinkle. Her turn of phrase—and she loves conversation—is often homey. En route from Chicago to Palm Beach, Mrs. Davis, seated in a suite at the Sherry Netherland, spoke glowingly of last Sunday's rally of the Chicago Committee for Russian War Relief. "The auditorium was packed. They cheered when my husband came in. He made a thrilling speech. It gave me goose flesh you could hang your hat on!"

* * *

Chairman of War Relief Concert.

Endowed with a masculine mentality, Mrs. Davies is an ideal chairman for the big Russian War Relief concert to take place in Washington March 31. White Russian Koussevitsky and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have donated their services.

The paradox of capitalistic Mrs. Davies making an unprecedented hit with the big fortunes and a business which must prepare to weather the exigencies of wartime.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former Ambassador to Russia.

The Russians respected this. When Mrs. Davies asked permission to see Mme. Vyacheslaff Molotoff's soap factory it was granted at once. Going through the plant Mrs. Davies remarked that there was no "aging room." "You may not know," she smiled the other day, "that all soaps are aged for about seven years, in order to eliminate the lye. The Russians do this in the process of production." There are no soaps in Mrs. Davies' business—it is just one of those things she knows.

* * *

Invited to Lunch with Mme. Molotoff

"Will you lunch with me next week at my dascha (country place)?" Mme. Molotoff had asked. Mrs. Davies accepted in the spirit she would agree to meet Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett at the Colony. It was another "first." Mme. Molotoff, head of the Cosmetic Trust, was not in the habit of entertaining in the middle of a working day, had certainly never done so before for an American capitalist.

"As we drove through a fairyland of huge white birch trees laden with snow Mme. Molotoff's car sped past us—she was on her way home from the factory. All women work in Russia. We passed houses with green fences, government officials'. There was one enchanting villa with a pale-blue roof and lavender walls. I asked whose it was. 'We don't know,' is the eternal answer in Russia. I fooled them—I got hold of a 1914 Baedeker and learned a lot." Out of the casual chaos in which Russians live have sprung a new people. "They have done a remarkable job," emphasized the wife of the ex-Ambassador whose report has been compared with everything from "the tradition of Benjamin Franklin and Will Rogers" to "the swallowing of a lot of Red propaganda."

* * *

The Woman with Rights.

Mrs. Davies, whose father wanted her to go to work, has a horror of the Woman with Rights. "She was a fearsome sight when I was a girl. I think that is what put me off college. I approve now, although my two older daughters never went."

Her youngest, the blond deb, Nedenia Hutton, who last fall attended the co-ed University of Wisconsin, her stepfather's alma mater, has decided in favor of an Eastern college next autumn. She is in Palm Beach giving Red Cross lessons.

Mrs. Robert (Emlen Davies) Grosjean's new baby daughter, Marilen, born last month, was the seventh grandchild. Emlen while in Russia, undertook to learn the language and studied international law at the University of Moscow. During the dinner which the Ambassador and Mrs. Davies gave for the officers of the Red army, Emlen was asked by an official if she had studied Karl Marx. She had, she informed him, at Vassah, and found his theories lacking. "But look at the freedom we enjoy!" he exclaimed. "You don't know what real freedom is!" Emlen retorted.

Mr. and Mrs. Davies, obviously devoted to each other, met at a dinner party. They might have met sooner, for they had many friends in common. It just didn't happen that way. Their wedding, Mrs. Davies' third and his second, was the talk, six years ago, of American society. Both from the vital West, keen-minded and delighted with life, they match. As far as Marjorie Davies is concerned life began at 49.

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE
MAR 19 1942

All-Russian Concert Set For March 31

Boston Conductor Schedules Two Day Program In Washington

Serge Koussevitsky, Russian conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced an all-Russian program for the special concert by his unit in Constitution Hall, Washington, Tuesday, March 31. The orchestra will play the music of Shostakovitch and Prokofieff, living Russian composers, and two past greats, Tchaikovsky and Moussorgsky.

Featured in the program will be the fifth symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch which comprises the second portion of the concert. In Leningrad all during the Nazi siege, the young Russian found time to compose this new symphony which was first presented at Kuibishev on March 1.

Opening the concert will be Serge Prokofieff's "Classical" symphony, a symphony in miniature after the forms of the eighteenth century. The Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanstchina" and Tchaikovsky's Overture - Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" are also slated.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the ex-Ambassador to Russia from the United States, is chairman of the sponsoring committee. The program is staged for the Russian War Relief funds.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAR 15 1942

Seats Going Fast For Concert by Boston Symphony

Constitution Hall has been more than half sold out for the concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Sergei Koussevitzski, on Tuesday night, March 31. Interest in the event has a two-fold basis in the fact that the organization has not been heard in Washington for several years and that the concert is a benefit for Russian war relief. While the program has not yet been announced, it is understood that only Russian compositions will be played. The local manager for the concert is C. C. Cappel, whose boxoffice is in Ballard's 1340 G Street.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
MAR 14 1942

BENEFIT CONCERT

Musically March will end with a flourish. On Tuesday evening, March 31, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give a program at 8:30 p. m. in Constitution Hall. The orchestra will give its program for the benefit of war relief to Russia. The concert will open with the "Star Spangled Banner" and close with the "Internationale." Tickets for this concert are handled by C. C. Cappel, 1340 G-st nw.

Tomorrow evening at 6:30 at the Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel, Howard University, Henry Booker, organist will give a program. He will play "Trumpet Tune" by Purcell, "Larghetto in B Minor" by Handel, "Prelude and Fugue in E Flat" by Bach. . . . In the PM Series at Pierce Hall, 16th and Harvard, at 5:30 Monday will appear two artists, William Gephart, baritone, and Ethel Taylor, soprano. Richard Wagner will be featured twice. Mr. Gephart will sing "Song to the Evening Star" while Miss Taylor will be heard in "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin." . . . At Pierce Hall Thursday evening, Jean Westbrook, violinist, and Everett Stevens, pianist, will give a concert. They will open their program with Brahms' "Sonata in D Minor for Violin and Piano."

Alice Blengsli, a young Scandinavian-American concert and radio pianist, will give a recital in the Wardman Park Theater Thursday evening, March 26, at 8:30. The concert is under the sponsorship of the Norwegian Society of Washington. Proceeds will go to a fund for the benefit of topedoed Norwegian seamen. . . . Clarence Watters, organist and instructor of music at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., will give a recital at 8:30 next Thursday evening, March 19, in the Washington Cathedral under the auspices of the D. C. Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. Mr. Watters is a pupil of Marcel Dupre. The program will include "Stations" by Dupre, a number especially appropriate at this season.

A "Pop" Concert will be played by the Navy Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Lieut. Charles Brendler at the Marine Auditorium, Eighth and I streets se, next Tuesday evening at 8:15 p. m. Solist will be Musician Jean Kayaloff, cello. The program will include selections from the works of Franz Lehar, Johann Strauss and Franz Liszt. The Navy Band chorus wil give "Sea Chanties." . . . Wednesday evening in the same auditorium the Marine Symphony Orchestra will give a concert at 8:15 under the direction of Capt. William F. Santelmann. Featured numbers will be "Till Eulenspiegel" by Richard Strauss, "A Song of Summer" by Frederick Delius, and "Symphonic Sketches" by George W. Chadwick.

The Southwestern Branch of the Public Library, Seventh and H streets sw, presents an evening with the victrola Monday at 7:30 p. m. . . . In celebration of its 15th anniversary and in honor of its director, the Lovette Choral Club will hold a reception and musical next Wednesday evening at 8:30 at the DAR Chapter House, 1732 Massachusetts-av. . . . Because of the blackout last night, the musical at Kitts was postponed to next Friday evening at the YWCA.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAR 15 1942

Soviet Song To Be Played At Concert

'Internationale' Is Featured on Program Of Boston Symphony Russian Relief Benefit

Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, herself an accomplished musician and vice chairman on Mrs. Joseph E. Davies' committee for the single concert for benefit of Russian Relief which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present at Constitution Hall Tuesday evening, March 31, was especially interested to learn that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has had a special orchestration made of the Russian anthem, "The Internationale," for this occasion. It seems that when he began looking around for an official orchestration of this air, there was none to be found so he asked the brilliant young American composer, Aaron Copland, to do this arrangement for the Boston orchestra to use.

Several more diplomatic reservations have been made including boxes taken by the Minister from the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon, the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Close and Dr. T. V. Soong. The Minister of Czecho-Slovakia and Mme. Hurban have taken a group of seats.

Max Truitt has reserved two boxes and others making box reservations recently include Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Owen Roberts, Miss Mabel Boardman and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor.

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who have made it possible to arrange this concert as a benefit in Washington include Dr. Henry B. Cabot, Alvan T. Fuller, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Roger I. Lee, Richard Paine and Henry B. Sawyer, all of Boston; Jerome D. Greene, of Cambridge, and N. Penrose Hallowell, of New York City.

Mrs. Davies writes from her beautiful Palm Beach home, Mar-a-Lago, that among those who have sent her acceptances to date for her list of patrons and patronesses for this concert for Russian relief are:

Mrs. Dean G. Acheson, Mrs. Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. William Batt, Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Stephen Early, Mrs. Walter E. Edge, Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Burdette Fitch, Mrs. George A. Garrett, Mrs. Walter F. George, Mrs. Robert L. Grosjean, Mrs. James M. Helm, Mrs. Gilbert M. Hitchcock, Mrs. George R. Holmes, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. Harold I. Ickes, Mrs. Jesse Jones, Mrs. Arthur Krock, Mrs. Emory Scott Land, Lady Lewis, Mrs. Walter Lippman, Mme. Litvinoff, Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, Mrs. Malcolm S. McConihe, Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, Mrs. George Marshall, Mrs. Henry J. Morgenthau, jr., Mrs. Fleming Newbold, Mrs. Frank B. Noyes, Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, Mrs. Robert T. Pell, Mrs. Claude D. Pepper, Mrs. Close Rand, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Seth W. Richardson, Mrs. Donald Richberg, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Mrs. Harold Stark, Mrs. T. V. Soong, Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury, Mrs. Thomas B. Sweeney, Mrs. Robert A. Taft, Mrs. Myron C. Taylor, Mrs. Corcoran Thom, Mrs. Henry S. Simpson, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Miss Grace Tully, Mrs. Mildred Tydings, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, Mrs. Matthew John Whittal, Mrs. Arthur Woods, Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Mrs. Orme Wilson and Mrs. John Russell Young.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

MAR 15 1942

Koussevitzky Has Pioneered In New Music

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Washington will renew acquaintance with a significant figure in the world of music when Serge Koussevitzky is announced to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall, March 31.

Boston is conservative. There must have been some truth in the couplet:

"Here's to dear old Boston,
"Home of the bean and the cod,
"Where the Lowells speak only to the Cabots
"And the Cabots speak only to God."

else it would not have been current for more than a generation.

Socially exclusive, the city also established a reputation for a cultural life definitely Anglophile. When the Boston Symphony was founded 60 years ago, London was just beginning to exchange its worship of Mendelssohn for an equally devout attitude toward Wagner.

Dominated By Germans

Since the days of George I, who spoke only German, English musical life had been dominated by German composers and conductors. The French and the Italians had a dwindling share of Covent Garden's opera season. Symphony was all-German.

Boston adopted that attitude unquestioningly and engaged German conductors only until Karl Muck offended the community during the last German war.

Boston thereupon turned against German conductors, tried a Frenchman briefly, refused to consider any native artist, but discovered Koussevitzky. The city's unrivaled capacity for loyalty has been centered on him for 18 years and never has he let his admirers down. He began an aggressive campaign for new music.

Protesting and puzzled, Boston was finally persuaded that Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Hindemith and Honneger had created works of beauty or of challenge.

Gradually its public learned to be guided by Koussevitzky's taste; and when he began to play native music with increasing frequency nobody stayed away from Symphony Hall or stamped angrily out of a concert.

Plays Native Music

The National Music Council gave Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony first place, a year ago, in the matter of premieres of native compositions.

Kindler since then has crowded him into second place in that category, but that need not deter Koussevitzky from placing something American on his program here. In fact, his return to the Nation's Capital after so many years should be celebrated with some native music.

This obligation seems the more binding since the eminent Russian conductor and his orchestra appear here under the sponsorship of their own trustees at a benefit for Russian War Relief.

One assumes that his program will be largely Russian; but out of his genuine interest in American music and not just as a courtesy, he should permit the American composer and the American public to profit by the occasion, especially in this setting.

Koussevitzky seems to possess prophetic vision in the matter of new European music.

There is no proof that his sense of values has been equally fortunate in the matter of American music.

Two explanations are suggested by this phenomenon:

1. Boston is still Anglophile and will accept Americans only with English approval.

2. The American composers have not produced a commanding personality to dominate many charming or challenging figures.

Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall on March 31.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER

MAR 20 1942

Washington Visit

When the Boston Symphony orchestra visits Washington on Tuesday evening, March 21, Dr. Koussevitzky will present an all-Russian program for the benefit of the Russian war relief. On the program will be Prokofieff's Classical Symphony; Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantschina;" Tschaikowsky's Overture-Fantasia and Romeo and Juliet and the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch. The concert will be preceded by a special flag ceremony in which the flags of 26 Allied nations will be assembled on the stage. This will be the orchestra's first appearance in the national capital for several years.

When for the benefit of the pension fund the Boston Symphony orchestra presents excerpts from Bach's Magnificat and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on April 26, the soloists in the choral numbers will be Zina Lisichkina, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; William Hain, tenor and Julius Huehn, baritone.

The Boston university orchestra in which at least one Lowell student plays, is to give its second concert of the season in the Hayden Memorial auditorium, under Arthur Fiedler's direction next Tuesday evening.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

MAR 21 1942

Boston Symphony Give Russian Benefit Concert In Washington Mar. 31

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will give its first concert in Washington, D. C., in seven years on March 31. Proceeds of the concert will go to Russian War Relief for the purchase of medicines and surgical supplies for Russia.

Plans for the concert were announced in Washington by Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former American Ambassador to the Soviet Union and chairman of the committee in charge for Russian War Relief, and Mrs. Edward M. Watson, vice-chairman of the committee.

Koussevitsky, a native of Russia, is one of the sponsors of Russian War Relief, Inc., and has been active for months in raising funds for relief supplies.

A branch chapter of Russian War Relief, Inc., is in the process of organization in Washington. Headquarters for a provisional committee already have ben opened in the Farragut Medical Building.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAR 20 1942

'Internationale' to Open Symphony Concert Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert for the benefit of Russian war relief will open at Constitution Hall on March 31 with the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and the "Internationale."

Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, noted Russian conductor, the orchestra will perform an all-Russian program. Flags of the 26 allied nations will be flown from the stage of the hall.

Mrs. Joseph F. Davies, wife of the former United States Ambassador to Russia, is chairman for the benefit.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

MAR 22 1942

Koussevitzky Program Here Disappointing

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the program which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to play here March 31, for the benefit of Russian War Relief. It is disappointing; for all the compositions listed, with one exception, have had four or more performances here by Washington and Philadelphia orchestras this season.

The program is scheduled to open with Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony which Kindler, Ormandy, Brendler and Santelmann have played within the month. Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture had four recent performances. The Fifth Symphony, by Shostakovich, with which Koussevitzky plans to close, has been heard four times this season and was played as often last season.

One Unfamiliar Work

The only unfamiliar work chosen by Koussevitzky for this important event is Moussorgsky's prelude to the opera "Khovanstchina." Moussorgsky died before completing this opera and the score was finished by Rimsky-Korsakow.

It is unnecessary to point out to the alert Koussevitzky that with the exception of the Moussorgsky prelude his entire program is comprised of works constantly reiterated on the air.

Coming from the conservative city of Boston, the eminent Russian conductor doubtless has observed that his public likes best that music which it knows best. Weekly visits to New York and occasional tours into the hinterland may have persuaded him that other communities are equally reluctant to adventure into the musical unknown.

Everyone will admit the desirability of a more detailed knowledge of Shostakovich and his Fifth Symphony. His is a commanding figure in the world of Russian art and this is a work of noble and varied beauty. No one will make a similar claim for Prokofieff's ironic "Classical" Symphony. It is witty and beguiling; yet it belongs with the music of entertainment rather than with the music of great art.

As for Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet," it is great, but it owes its immediate popularity to some pilfering swingster who lifted the second theme in part. The musically ignorant found it good and now want to hear the work as a whole, though how they identified the source is not clear.

For Good Cause

Koussevitzky returns here after many years through the generosity of his orchestra's trustees. They are deeply interested in Russian war relief; and though the proud Russians have pointedly refrained from soliciting this kind of help, asking instead for arms, the music lovers of the city are glad to contribute.

It doubtless is unnecessary to point out to the courtly Koussevitzky that the event, apart from its Russian significance, might be celebrated graciously by including the work of a native composer in this program. He plans to open with Aaron Copland's setting of the Russian National Anthem, but that hardly seems enough.

Many of the better-informed music lovers have been interested in Koussevitzky's long and fruitful propaganda for native music. They recognize the patriotic impulse that prompts a great Russian conductor, living profitably and honorably in this country, to stimulate the art that belongs especially to it. To stress this phase of his activity just now would be good publicity.

Were he to substitute for Prokofieff or Tschaikowsky an overture by Sowerby or DeLamarter, or a suite by Taylor or Carpenter, everybody would be gratified.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

MAR 22 1942

New Pin Aids Russian Relief

Another gay lapel pin is making its appearance around Washington to add to the procession of symbols of aid to the Allies.

It's the "Happy Landings" pin on sale at headquarters for Russian War Relief, Inc., in the Farragut Medical Building. First to wear it are members of the committee sponsoring the concert to be given by the Bostor Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall on March 31, and also the patronesses for that event.

The pin was designed by Lester Gaba, young Russian-American.

Developed in white and gold, with red and blue enamel, the emblem shows a brave Russian parachutist in action. There are two sizes, one a miniature for men.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

MAR 22 1942

Symphony Concert To Aid Soviet Relief

Proceeds of the concert to be given in Constitution Hall March 31 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be used to send medical supplies, food and cigarettes to Russia, Mrs. Joseph Davies, chairman of the Russian War Relief, Inc., committee sponsoring the event, announced yesterday. Mrs. Davies said a permanent Russian War Relief organization will be formed in Washington to spur contributions.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

MAR 22 1942

Boston Symphony Coming To Capital

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, will give a concert in Washington on the night of March 31.

The concert, to be given for the benefit of Russian war relief, will take place in Constitution Hall, and the program is devoted entirely to music by Russian composers.

Composers represented are Tchaikowsky, Moussorgsky, Prokofiev and Shostakovitch.

Dr. Koussevitsky is particularly noted for his interpretations of Russian music. The principal work of the evening will be the fifth symphony by Shostakovitch, a composition which the conductor considers "as great as any of the symphonies of Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikowsky or Sibelius."

From the works of Tchaikowsky, Dr. Koussevitsky has chosen the overture-fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet." The Moussorgsky composition is the prelude to the opera, "Khovanstchina," while the remaining work scheduled is the "Classical Symphony," by Prokofiev.

DARIEN, CONN REVIEW
3/20/42

Sheridan to Give Stamford Recital

Internationally Known Pianist Will Appear on Daycroft School Program

Frank Sheridan, internationally known pianist, and a member of the faculty of Julliard School of Music in New York, will appear in the final of a series of three concerts by the Mother's Club of the Daycroft School in the Stamford Auditorium at 3:30 P. M., on Sunday.

Mr. Sheridan is recognized as an unquestioned genius and has participated with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, the Boston, Chicago and Detroit Symphonys, the National Orchestral Association, the Dresden Philharmonic, the Vienna Symphony, the Philco Radio Concert and numerous other performances in London, Berlin, Milan, Florence, Rome, Bologna and Pisa.

The artist has gathered momentum with each of his appearances before the most fastidious of music lovers, and has won their acclaim and devotion by his humility and restraint, his keen insight and absorption in doing great service to the composers whose works he interprets.

Mr. Sheridan's recitals in Europe and America have been a notable display of musical art in which fluent technical equipment, high intelligence and inspiration have produced unforgettable experience for his audiences.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAR 27 1942

RUSSIAN BENEFIT CONCERT TUESDAY

Boston, March 27.—(UP)—President and Mrs. Roosevelt will head a distinguished list of patrons attending a Russian benefit concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held at Constitution Hall, Washington, Tuesday, it was announced today.

Maxim Litvinoff, Russian Ambassador, and his wife, Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, members of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet and Congress also will attend. Russian-born Serge Koussevitsky, now a full-fledged American citizen, will conduct.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

MAR 27 1942

Flags of 26 Nations Will Wave at Benefit

There will be a touch of international color for the first time on the stage of Constitution Hall, representing 26 Allied Nations a week from Tuesday night, March 31, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, presents its first program in Washington for quite some time. The concert will be for the benefit of Russian Relief and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies is chairman. It is planned to have all the flags of the 26 nations brought to the stage to form the background for this event.

The 26 nations are: The United States of America, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, Great Britain, China, Belgium, Australia, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Norway, the Union of South Africa, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Greece, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland, Nicaragua, and Panama.

Following the flag ceremony, it has been arranged for the great Russian conductor to lead the orchestra in both "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "The Internationale" preceding the regular program which is to include all Russian works.

The symphony of the evening will be by young Dimitri Shostakovich, living Soviet composer who was in Leningrad during the siege of the capital. He is proud of being an air raid warden but his defense duties have not deterred him from completing his seventh symphony this winter. It was given its premiere at Kuibishev, near Moscow, on March 1.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAR 25 1942

Boston Symphony Program for D. C. Has Been Changed

Word has been received from Boston that Sergei Koussevitzki, who will conduct the single concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Tuesday night in Constitution Hall for the benefit of Russian war relief, has made two changes in the announced program of Russian music.

In place of Dmitri Shostakovich's fifth symphony, he will conduct that composer's sixth symphony, which has been heard here only once before when performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra in December of 1940. Chaikovski's fifth symphony will take the place of the overture-fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." The concert will begin with Prokofiev's "Classical" symphony.

Reservations for this benefit concert are handled by C. C. Cappel at his bureau in Ballard's, 1340 G Street.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAR 25 1942

Mrs. Davies Here To Aid Concert

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, chairman for the concert to be given next Tuesday evening at Constitution Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the benefit of Russian Relief, arrived in Washington this morning to give a broadcast at 1:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Davis will be at her home here overnight and take a noon train tomorrow for New York for a brief visit. She will return to Washington Saturday to remain in town until after the concert. She expects to go back to her Palm Beach estate.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

MAR 27 1942

WASHINGTON CONCERT FOR RUSSIAN RELIEF

The concert scheduled at Rutgers University Wednesday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be preceded Tuesday evening by a concert in Washington, D. C., for the benefit of the Russian War Relief. The affair will open the Washington Russian War Relief Committee's spring campaign and will take place at Constitution Hall. President and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace and Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff and representatives of all the United Nations embassies and legations head the list of sponsors.

Among other Russian War Relief events will be an exhibition of paintings and drawings by American and Russian children between the ages of 6 and 14. It will open tomorrow at 4 p. m. at the Barbizon Plaza Art Galleries, 101 West 58th street, New York City.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

MAR 24 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Play Russian Works

To Make 8th Appearance At Rutgers University On April 1

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play works of Russian composers when they make their eighth appearance in the Rutgers University Concert Series Wednesday, April 1, at 8:30 p. m. They will present their program in the College avenue gymnasium.

The four selections to be given include two by the 19th century composers, Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov, and one by the young modern, Shostakovitch. The fourth is by Mozart.

The program includes Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony in C Major; Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Rimsky-Korsakov's introduction and wedding march from the opera "Le Coq d'Or"; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 6.

All of the members of the program are later works of the composers. "Jupiter" was Mozart's last symphony while "Le Coq d'Or" was Rimsky-Korsakov's last work. Shostakovitch only finished his Sixth Symphony about a year ago, after his Fifth Symphony had been generally hailed as one of the important contributions to modern music.

Announcement of the program was made today by Dr. Howard D. McKinney, head of the music department at Rutgers.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

TWO LEADING LADIES ON THE WASHINGTON SCENE

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, chairman of the Russian Relief Benefit, and Mme. Litvinov, wife of the Soviet Ambassador, as they appeared recently at a Russian Relief rally in Chicago. Washington's huge benefit will be held next Tuesday night in Constitution Hall when the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky will play for the stirring cause.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 29 1942

Koussevitzky Revises Russ Benefit Program

For the Boston Symphony's Russian benefit concert in Constitution Hall, Tuesday evening, Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor of this famous ensemble, has issued a new program.

Heeding the complaints of Washington music lovers who deplored further repetitions of Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" poem, and the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovich which have been heard many times this season, Koussevitzky will substitute the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikowsky for the poem, and the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich for his Fifth.

The program first announced was tentative, Dr. Koussevitzky's representative explains. He hoped to have the honor of the American premiere of the Shostakovich Seventh, the new "War Symphony" which had its first hearing in Russia March 1.

The program will remain all-Russian, since this is to be a benefit for the Russian War Relief.

America's musical share in the event is to be small but important. Koussevitzky desired to play the Soviet National Anthem, otherwise "The Internationale" as well as "The Star Spangled Banner" as preface to the concert. No symphonic setting of the former was available so Aaron Copland has made one. "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be played in the Chadwick arrangement, long the official setting for the Boston Symphony.

The Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich was played here by Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. It has had only one previous hearing in this city. The Prokofieff "Classical" Symphony is retained to open the concert.

NATIONAL JEWISH LEDGER
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS
SILVER SPRING, MD
NEWS
3/27/42

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony Orchestra For Benefit Of Russian War Relief

Serge Koussevitzky, the famous Russian conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announces an all-Russian program for the special concert which his orchestra will give in Washington on March 31 for the benefit of the Russian War Relief. The music is chosen from two leading composers of our day now living in Russia, Shostakovitch and Prokofieff, and two of the greatest composers of Russia's past, Tchaikovsky and Moussorgsky.

The Fifth Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch, which will comprise the second portion of the program, has been played by principal orchestras in many cities, and has confirmed the promises of his First Symphony, written in the boyhood of the extraordinarily talented young man. Shostakovitch has remained in Leningrad through the siege of the Russian capital, and was active in the fire brigade formed when the city was bombed. This did not prevent him from composing a new symphony, his Seventh, which had its first performance at Kuibishev, near Moscow, on March 1. The Fifth Symphony, like the new one, bears the msesage in its finale of a hymn of victory.

Serge Prokofieff's "Clasical" Symphony, a symphony in miniature after the forms of the eighteenth century, will open the program. The Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera "Khovanstchina" will also be played, and Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet."

The famous orchestra's Washington concert will be a notable social as well as musical event, and will be of particular significance in a nation-wide drive for the relief of Russia in the throes for its resistance to invasion. Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the ex-Ambassador to Russia from the United States, is Chairman of the Committee sponsoring this concert. The concert will be given in Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening, March 31. Tickets are obtainable at the C. C. Cappel Concert Bureau, 1340 G. Street N. W., Washington. D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
MAR 29 1942

Charity Is Occasion for Many Parties

Sweet Charity is the reason for many parties through these early spring days and hostesses vie with one another to interest the largest number of people in their own pet charity. One of the results of the visit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Washington will be the morning musicale Wednesday which Mme. Litvinoff, wife of the Soviet Ambassador has planned. The program will be given by a string quartet by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are coming for the concert Tuesday evening which will benefit the Russian Relief fund.

The concert Tuesday in Constitution Hall will be preceded by numerous dinner parties and one or more suppers after the program. Dr. Serge Koussevitski will conduct the all Russian music and with Mrs. Koussevitska probably will stay with the Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff, who are planning a buffet supper after the concert Tuesday for their guests.

The benefit will remind older residents of the Capital of the brilliant audience which greeted the late Jan Ignace Paderewski, former Premier of Poland, when he gave a recital for the benefit of Polish relief during the Hoover administration. It was a very unusual occasion when the audience, led by Mrs. Hoover, rose, as one person, to greet Mr. Paderewski when he appeared at the door of the platform.

Dr. Koussevitski and the Boston Symphony Orchestra also are donating their services for the concert Tuesday and will play to a similar audience of distinguished men and women. Mrs. Roosevelt is expected to occupy her box and will have guests with her while the Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, 8 of the 10 Cabinet officers, all of the Supreme Court Justices, numbers of members of the Congress as well as lesser officials of the Federal Government and a large number of diplomats representing the United Nations have given their names as patrons and patronesses for the benefit of Russian relief.

The series of teas being given to interest society in the Save the Children Federation will continue for several weeks and one of the largest of the series was given yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Horace Williams, who entertained in the Madison Room of Wardman Park Hotel. The Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan were among the diplomats invited and attractive young Senorita Cristina Michels, daughter of the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels, with others from the staffs of Embassies and Legations were in the large company.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
MAR 31 1942

U. S. and Soviet Anthems Listed on Same Program

Starch-bosomed and tiaraed Washington for probably the first time tonight will hear a major gathering opened by the "Star Spangled Banner" and the Soviet national anthem, "Internationale." Occasion will be the Boston Symphony's Russian War Relief benefit concert at 8:30 in Constitution Hall, with a procession of 26 United Nations flags preceding Serge Koussevitsky conducting three Russian symphonies—Shostakovich's Sixth, Tschaikowsky's Fifth and the "Classical" of Prokofieff. Orchestra seats are $5, proceeds going to war relief.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
SUNDAY TIMES
MAR 29 1942

Dr. Hu Shih Is Listed as Guest

Name Chinese Ambassador As Speaker Next Thursday Morning

The appearance of Dr. Hu Shih, Chinese ambassador to the United States and noted historian and educator, is expected to highlight the schedule of events for the coming week on the Rutgers University campus.

The foremost contemporary scholar of his country, Dr. Hu Shih will address undergraduates and townspeople at a university convocation Thursday morning at 11 in the College avenue gymnasium.

Other noteworthy talks planned include a discussion of "Julien Green, Franco-American Novelist" by Maurice Coindreau, professor of French literature at Princeton University and translater of American works into French; and a description of recent research on hypnosis by Dr. Griffith W. Williams of the Rutgers psychology department.

Professor Coindreau will appear before the university's French Club tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the Romange Language building at 60 College avenue, while Dr. Williams will speak at a meeting of the New Brunswick Scientific Society in Van Dyck Hall Tuesday at 8:15 p. m.

Outstanding campus musical event will be the eighth local appearance of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They will present the final program of the 26th concert series at the university Wednesday at 8:30 p. m. in the gymnasium.

The week-end boasts a varied program including the annual Barn Hop of the university's Agricultural Club in the gym Friday evening from 8 to 12, the annual Easter week-end concert of the Glee Club at the Hotel Dennis in Atlantic City, and a debate between a team of national woman champions from Northwestern University and one from Rutgers Friday afternoon at 4 in the Ballantine building.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
MAR 30 1942

Dr. Koussevitsky To Visit President

The President will have as his guest at luncheon tomorrow Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who is coming to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concert tomorrow evening for the benefit of Russian relief. Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra are donating their services for the concert which will be given in Constitution Hall. Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of former United States Ambassador to Moscow is chairman of the committee arranging the benefit and Dr. Koussevitsky is expected to be the guest of the Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinoff during his stay here.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
SUNDAY TIMES
MAR 29 1942

Boston Orchestra Will Play New Shostakovitch Symphony

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra to this city for the eighth consecutive year Wednesday night at 3:30 in the concluding concert of the 26th series at Rutgers University.

Feature of the program, which includes works by Mozart and Tschaikovsky, will be the Symphony No. 6 composed by the young Russian contemporary, Shostakovitch, only a year ago. In its first performance two weeks ago in Boston, it received a remarkable ovation, and in a sharp departure from usual practice the Boston Orchestra will repeat it during Wednesday night's performance.

Shostakovitch is continuing the musical style started in the 19th century by Glinka, Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov. Under the guidance of the government, composers have been encouraged to write simply and directly and to express themselves in an idiom that is of today, and Shostakovitch has been the most successful of the present-day Soviet composers.

Dr. Koussevitzky considers this new symphony an even better and more spontaneous work than the Fifth Symphony.

Mozart's Symphony in C Major and Tschaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet," complete the program.

Records of the works to be presented will be played at the University's Music House on College avenue tomorrow and Tuesday evenings at 8. Dr. Howard D McKinney, head of the music department, will give short explanatory remarks concerning the records. Students and townspeople have been invited to attend.

Rutgers paid tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky when President Robert C. Clothier awarded him an honorary degree of Doctor of Letters during his appearance here in 1937. The award, Dr. Clothier told the musician at that time, was given "to welcome into the fellowship of the university one who has been a life-long resident in the realm of music and who has interpreted the great masterpieces to countless lovers of music."

Dr. Koussevitzky became a veteran orchestra conductor at the tender age of 11 years, when he conducted the musical organization of his native town. He graduated from the Conservatory of Moscow with the degree of Master of Free Arts in 1894.

In 1908 he became conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra following a successful tour of the European continent. He returned to Russia, but his career was interrupted by the revolution and he eventually arrived in the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAR 29 1942

Notable Group to Hear Boston Symphony Tuesday Evening

There will be truly gala atmosphere at Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening when the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, presents the benefit program to help Russian relief, under a list of patrons that might well be called "The Who's Who of the World Capital," headed as it is by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Vice President and Mrs. Wallace, the Ambassador of Soviet Russia, the Ambassador of Great Britain and the Ambassador of China.

The flags of the 26 Allied Nations will be brought into the hall to formally herald the program and will be followed by the orchtra's playing of both "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "The Internationale" of Russia, preceding the regular musical program.

Boxes and seats will be filled with thousands of faces, most of whom are internationally famous and seem familiar when met on street or in restaurant by the thousands of newcomers to Washington who thrill to see "in person" the folks whose faces are in all the magazines and newspapers. The audience will be a great show to these strangers in town (provided they can get tickets), as the orchestra's program will be a musical treat. It is anticipated that every seat will be filled.

Dr. Kyussevitzky in honor to his native land, will conduct three symphonies—all Russian. They will include Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony," "The Sixth Symphony," by Shostakovich, and "The Fifth Symphony," by Tschaikowsky.

Postlude

Symphony Bows Out In Top Form

By Ray C. B. Brown

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall on Monday night in the final concert of the eleventh season. Annual request program of compositions by Wagner, Chaikovski, Borodin and Brahms.

Although a belated snowstorm had postponed the National Symphony Orchestra's last concert of the season for a day, it did not abate the enthusiasm of the large audience which assembled in Constitution Hall last evening to bid au revoir to the organization and its conductor, Hans Kindler. That they enjoyed the program was a foregone conclusion, for it was one prepared after a counting of their own votes. But to the procedure of the annual request program, sanctioned by 11 years of custom, something new was added when two colorbearers, one from the Army and one from the Marine Corps, appeared on the stage in precedence of Dr. Kindler, who faced the auditors and led them in the singing of the national anthem.

BROWN

Director and players were in gala temperament, and the concert had zest in intonation and sparkle in color. There is no better occasion than this to repeat what I said at the beginning of the season—that the National Symphony Orchestra has attained its majority as an artistic organism, and that its playing has the firm authority of experience as well as the fervor of youth.

The program consisted of Brahms' first symphony and three selections so familiar that the names of the composers need not be mentioned; the overture to "Die Meistersinger," three excerpts from the "Nutcracker" suite and the Polovetzkian dances from "Prince Igor." To these Dr. Kindler added as extra numbers before the intermission his own transcription of a Frescobaldi toccata and Shostakovich's mischievous polka.

This program is a proof that neglect of American composers must not necessarily be blamed entirely upon our conductors. The National Symphony Orchestra has played this season enough new native works to have made up an entire program with some left over. Yet the patrons, given the opportunity to express their wishes, voted for music with which they were thoroughly acquainted—and not one American composer won a place.

King-Smith Studio School presents Benno Rabinov and Bernardo Segall in a recital of sonatas for violin and piano by Brahms, Debussy and Turina on Monday night.

Postponed from the memorable March Sunday of snowdrifts was the enjoyable sonata recital given last evening in the cozy King-Smith Theater by the American violinist, Benno Rabinov, and the Brazilian pianist, who is our own by adoption, Bernardo Segall. By missing the latter part of the National Symphony concert, I arrived in time to hear what was for me the most rewarding part of the program, a sonata by Joaquin Turina. From the manner in which the collaborators played that engaging work I know that they did very well by the A major sonata of Brahms and the Debussy sonata.

With the excellence of Mr. Segall both as a technician and an artist of refinement we are well versed, and he had a compeer in Mr. Rabinov, whose tone is full-bodied and eloquent and whose technique has surety and polish. Their reading of the Turina sonata was plastic, fervent and sensitive. The sonata is one of melodic beauty, harmonic piquency and Iberian fire. A few traces of French influence in lyric phrasing detract no whit from its individuality of idiom.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
MAR 29 1942

Stage Enlarged for Event By Symphony of 110

The stage of Constitution Hall is being enlarged to accommodate the 110 musicians of the Boston Symphony who will play there Tuesday night in a benefit concert for the Russian War Relief, it was announced today.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, is expected to arrive tomorrow by plane and the orchestra is due to arrive by train at noon Tuesday.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt head the list of sponsors for the concert. High-ranking Government officials, diplomats, including Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinoff, and Army and Navy officers are expected to attend.

The program will be opened with a display of the flags of the 26 United Nations accompanied by a guard of honor. The fife and drum section of the Marine Band will take part. Following the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner," Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the "Internationale," in an arrangement made by Aaron Copeland.

The local committee sponsoring the event is headed by Mrs. Joseph Davies, with Mrs. Edwin Watson and Mrs. Emory Land as vice chairmen.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAR 31 1942

Boston Symphony Plays Here Today For Soviet Relief

With President and Mrs. Roosevelt heading the list of distinguished invited guests, the Russian War Relief committee will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky today at 8 p. m. at Constitution Hall, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, chairman of the Washington committee for Russian relief, announced yesterday.

The program will open with a presentation ceremony in which the flags of 26 United Nations will be displayed under a special United States Marine guard of honor. Then the Boston Symphony will begin its program with the United States and Russian national anthems.

Since this is the first opportunity in many years that Washington music lovers have had to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is expected that the concert will be a sell-out, Mrs. Davies said. The entire proceeds, over the orchestra's expenses, will go to the relief fund.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN
APR 1 - 1942

Rafters Ring to 'Internationale' In D.A.R.'s Constitution Hall

Washington Bureau of The Chicago Sun.

Washington, March 31. — The D. A. R. - owned Constitution Hall rang tonight to music strange to it when the Soviet anthem, "The Internationale," was played there for the first time.

The occasion was a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky for the benefit of Russian war relief.

In the distinguished audience, one of the most notable gathered in Washington since the beginning of the war, were Lady Halifax, wife of the British ambassador; Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Lt. Gen. and Mrs. William S. Knudsen, and Assistant Secretar of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who with th President was a patron of the cor cert, was boxholder No. 1. Th Soviet ambassador and Mme. Max im Litvinoff were the objects of a eyes during the evening.

Responsible for lining up an im posing list of patrons, (includin all nine members of the Suprem Court, and every member of th cabinet except Secretary of Labo Perkins and Secretary of Wa Henry L. Stimson) was Mrs. Jos eph E. Davies, wife of the former ambassador to Russia.

Every official American representative of the Allied nations was listed as a patron.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
MAR 31 1942

D. C. Concert Pays Tribute To Russia

By MAURY PAUL

NEW YORK, March 31.—To Marjorie Davies, wife of "Joe" Davies, our former Ambassador to Russia, must go credit for arranging what promises to be the de luxe musical event of the season—the concert tonight in Washington, D. C., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

Honored guests at the concert will be the Russian Ambassador to Washington and Mme. Litvinoff, and they will occupy a box in washington's Constitution Hall opposite the box in which the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will be seated.

For weeks past seats for the concert have been at a premium, and Constitution Hall will house as representative a gathering as it is possible to corral

For, in addition to the occupants of the White House and the Russian Embassy, boxes and seats will be occupied by every notable in the District of Columbia ranging from members of the Supreme Court to "buckwheat" Congressmen.

TRIBUTE TO RUSSIA

The event will be an all-out social tribute to Soviet Russia and, believe it or not, Mrs. Davies has even sold boxes and seats to Washington's "cave dwellers," who certainly had little in common with "Pal Joey" Stalin until Russian armed forces displayed their strength against our common enemy, the "brutalitarian of Berlin."

Kussevitsky and his Bostonian music-makers are giving their services, even paying their own expenses from Beantown to the Capital—and the entire proceeds will go to Russian War Relief, Inc., an American organization that provides medical supplies, surgical instruments and dressing for the Russian Army.

SIGNIFICANT PROGRAM

The great Russian conductor has arranged an all-Russian program of such composers as Tschaikovsky, Prokoieff and Shostakovich, and it had been hoped to have the manuscript of the last-mentioned composer's new Seventh Symphony, which he completed during the recent siege of Leningrad.

FLAG CEREMONY

Preceding the concert, I hear, there is to be an impressive flag ceremony, in which the flags of all nations signing the pact against the Axis forces will be displayed, with a running commentary about the flags and their history.

All in all, it will be a night of nights—musically and diplomatically.

One cannot deny that "Joe" and Marjorie Davies have done much to present the Russia of today in a pleasanter light to the American people, the former Ambasador's "Mission to Moscow" being a "best seller," and Marjorie Davies, who represents, strangely enough, U. S. A. wealth, finding much that is fine and worthwhile in what she saw in Russia.

However, even many of the "White Russians" in exile here, who had good reason to hate Stalin and what he represents, have rallied to the side of their homeland since Russia and Germany began battling each other.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
MAR 31 1942

Russian Relief Benefit to Draw Gala Audience

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, chairman of the Russian Relief benefit concert to be held at Constitution Hall Tuesday evening, returned to town yesterday from a short stay in New York, after spending several weeks at her winter villa at Palm Beach.

With Mrs. Edwin M. Watson and Mrs. Emory Scott Land, cochairmen for the musicale, Mrs. Davies has gathered top-rank members of diplomatic, official and residential society who have consented to be patrons for this event.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt head the list of sponsors, and Mrs. Roosevelt, who has been on the West Coast, has promised definitely to be in the White House box that evening. Vice President and Mrs. Wallace will also be there and representatives of many foreign countries have made reservations.

Dr. Koussevitsky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the program, has arranged for the playing of "The Internationale," the Soviet Union's national anthem, as well as the "Star-Spangled Banner" as a prelude to the program and a March of the Flags of the 26 United Nations is to be held preceding the music.

The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinov will have a box at the concert. Others who will attend are the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih; the British Ambassador and Lady Halifax, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, the Attorney General and Mrs. Francis Biddle, Justice and Mrs. Owen Roberts, Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Justice and Mrs. James F. Byrnes, Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley Senator and Mrs. Carter Glass

MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
APR 1 1942

Red Song Played in D. A. R. Hall

Russ Relief Concert Lists 'Internationale'

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — The strains of Communism's anthem, "The Internationale," filled staid Constitutional hall Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony orchestra played a Russian relief benefit concert in that citadel of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

A capacity crowd, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and other notables, crowded the auditorium. The stage was decked in the flags of the 26 United Nations, with the Russian red banner and the American Stars and Stripes in prominent positions.

Although the conductor, Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky, is a Russian by birth, it developed that he had never conducted "The Internationale" before. The arrangement by Dr. Aaron Copland, American composer, was used as the score.

Demonstrative spectators applauded loudly as the music ceased, to be followed by "the Star Spangled Banner." Cheers and applause greeted the Russian ambassador, Maxim Litvinov, and his wife. Also attending were former U. S. ambassador to Moscow, Joseph E. Davies, and Mrs. Davies.

The concert was organized by Mrs. Davies and listed Pres. Roosevelt as a sponsor.

Senate Democratic Leader Alben W. Barkley, Kentucky, appealed during the intermission for increased aid to Russia. He told the audience that the proceeds of the concert would contribute to relief for Russia's 60,000,000 homeless and 1,500,000 wounded soldiers.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.
KANSAN SHENANDOAH, PA.
HERALD
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
POST BELOIT, WIS.
NEWS
HASTINGS, NEB.
TRIBUNE
EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.
JOURNAL
ZANESVILLE, OHIO SIGNAL
APR 1 - 1942
DUNKIRK, N. Y.
OBSERVER
NORRISTOWN, PA.
TIMES-HERALD
COLUMBIA CITY, IND.
CITY POST
McCOOK, NEB.
GAZETTE
FORT MADISON, IOWA
DEMOCRAT
BELLEVILLE, ILL.
NEWS-DEMOCRAT
KEOKUK, IA.
GATE CITY
ALTON, ILL.
TELEGRAPH
MURPHYSBORO, ILL.
INDEPENDENT
ERIE, PA.
TIMES
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
APR 1 - 1942

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 1 - 1942

Gala Concert Draws Society to Russian Benefit Performance at Constitution Hall

Boston Symphony Plays Varied and Colorful Program

By Patricia Grady

They were all there—the top Washington officialdom of the United Nations—to honor their victorious ally, Russia, at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's benefit performance for Russian relief at Constitution Hall last night.

Coming into the flag-bedecked hall by the hundreds, Capital society rushed in from dinners before the event and rushed on afterward to suppers following the musical program under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. It was a cheering audience from the beginning with the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff taking the first bows from their corner box. With them were the Counselor of the Russian Embassy and Mme. Gromyko, and Mme. Yegorichev, wife of the Naval Attache of the Embassy, and as the hall filled, Mme. Litvinoff turned to her husband, after a significant look at the enthusiastic audience, with a whispered word that could only have been, "America is indeed with us." Later in the evening the Soviet envoy and his wife entertained at a small supper in honor of the Boston maestro.

Halifaxes Have Party With Them

So many celebrities were on hand that after the first buzzing of "There's Mrs. Roosevelt," and "Who's in the box with the Jesse Joneses?" the audience realized that no matter what direction they faced they were looking at a Great Name. With Mrs. Roosevelt were Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs Kermit Roosevelt, Mrs Cameron Clark, Mrs. David Bruce and Mrs Walter Thayer and in another box the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, entertained Field Marshal Sir John Dill and Lady Dill, Air Marshal Douglas Evill and Mrs Edwina d'Erlanger.

So representative was the group that when the Marines paraded the flags of the United Nations across the stage, there were many who could feel the thrill of country for each flag. The Dutch Minister and Mme. Loudon shared a box with the Netherlands Naval Attache and Mme. Ranneft and Gen. L. R. Dyxhoorn, and the Yugoslav Minister and Mme. Fotitch cheered their flag from the box of Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn. Sitting in a box with his son-in-law and daughter who had entertained at dinner earlier in the evening, was Senator Alben Barkley, who was the speaker of the evening. In the same party were the first United States Ambassador to Soviet Russia, William Bullitt; Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed. Mr and Mrs. William Stanley Mrs Abrams Hewitt and Mrs A Mitchell Palmer.

In a family group of three boxes were Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, whose wife was the organizing power behind last night's benefit, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings and Mr. and Mrs. Merrall MacNeille. The former Ambassador to Russia and Mrs. Davies were hosts at a small dinner before the concert at which their out-of-town guests included Mrs. Jerome Hill, of Pittsburgh; Lieut. Comdr. Gene Markey, late of Hollywood; Hans Habe, of New York, and Mrs. Davies' daughters, Mrs. Close Rand and Miss Nedenia Hutton.

Mr. and Mrs. John McCarthy entertained at a dinner at the Canadian Legation before going on to the concert. In their party were Miss Toinette Bachelder and Mr. and Mrs. Leonid Tichbinsky, of Annapolis, Md. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman was another dinner hostess having as her guests the Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Woodward had as their dinner and concert guests Mr. and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, Mrs. Arthur Fowler, John Thatcher and Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Barclay. The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf Berle entertained Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hoskins at dinner before going on to the benefit performance.

Celebrities On Every Side

Among the Cabinet contingent were the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, who had the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins with them, and the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Jesse Jones, whose guests were Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson. In a nearby box, the Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone entertained Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller and Mr. and Mrs. William L. Batt had with them Sir Clive Baillieu and Lady Baillieu, Miss Dinah Brand and Robert Batt. With Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Edwin Watson.

Just scraping the surface of who was in attendance at the greatest tribute to Russia Washington has ever seen, a few to be mentioned are Mrs. George Marye, who took her guests on afterwards to supper at the Mayflower, and had with her Mr. and Mrs. George Baker, of San Francisco, Princess Cantacuzene and Countess Cassini; Maj. Gen. Chu, Military Attache of the Chinese Embassy; Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Justice and Mrs. James Byrnes and Mr. and Mrs. Chandler Hale, sharing a box together; Bernard Baruch, the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Harold Ickes, the Postmaster General and Mrs. Frank Walker, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Maj. Guy R. Mountfort, the Greek Minister and Mme. Diamantopolos, the Philippine Commissioner, Joaquin Elizalde, who had a party with him; the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Troncoso, Mrs. Walter George, Mrs. Morgan Bradford, Mrs. Sumner Welles, Mrs. Cyrus McCormick, and the rest of Constitution Hall, almost all names of national and international renown.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.
TRIBUNE
APR 1 1942

HISTORY IN THE MAKING.

When the school text books on history are re-written this era will contribute some of the most amazing chapters. The Associated Press says that amid applause from a fashionable audience last night, the red banner of Soviet Russia was brought onto the platform of Constitution Hall, built and owned by out-spoken opponents of communism, the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The presentation of the flags of the twenty-six United Nations—the Soviet banner among them—was an impressive high spot on the Russian war relief program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and for this concert, brilliant in content and in attendance, the sponsors rented the stronghold of the D. A. R., the capital's only large auditorium.

Included in the rental fee were ushers with D. A. R. armbands. They stood at attention as did Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt; Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet ambassador; Madame Litvinoff; Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the audience as Serge Koussevitzky conducted the playing of the Internationale and the Star Spangled Banner.

It was the first time that the Soviet national anthem had been played in the American capital by a major orchestra, and certainly the first time by anyone from the platform of Constitutional Hall.

To the Soviet ambassador and his English-born wife, the playing of the Internationale was a dramatic moment. Both squared their shoulders at the opening strains. The ambassador pursed his lips. Madame Litvinoff looked out over the audience, solemn and intent. The list of patrons was headed by President Roosevelt, who, seldom lends his name to a cause, and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Such is the transition from peace to war; such are the emotions prompted by an alliance at arms. This nation has been closely guarded against communism; it has been indicted as the chief and most insidious force in the world against this republic. The perils presented by a common enemy have altered the case over night. What our future relations will be is in the laps of the gods.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALI
CHRONICLE
APR 1 - 1942

Constitution Hall Rings to Red Anthem

WASHINGTON, March 31 (AP)—The Internationale, Soviet national anthem, was played tonight in Constitution Hall, owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, who many times have denounced the communist philosophy the rallying song commemorates.

The occasion was the Boston Symphony concert for the benefit of the Russian war relief. The event was not sponsored by the DAR, which merely made its hall available. The list of patrons was headed by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the Vice President and Mrs. Wallace.

There were important names and important wealth in the sell-out audience that came to hear Serge Koussevitzky conduct the 115-piece orchestra in a program all-Russian with but one exception—"The Star-Spangled Banner."

The diplomatic colony turned out. There was a box reserved by the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax and Lady Halifax.

The Internationale, a revolutionary marching song, older than the Soviet Union, was orchestrated especially for this concert by Aaron Copland, modern American composer of New York. Koussevitzky found there was no official version suitable for a large orchestra.

THE Daughters of American Revolution (who held a state conference in Racine last week), are proud of their revolutionary ancestors. That's how they happen to be organized. But it's the AMERICAN revolution they're thinking about—not the Russian. Patriotic to the core, they have been among the most bitter foes of communism in this country. So playing of the communist hymn in their hall causes a lifting of eyebrows throughout the country. The eyebrows come down somewhat when it's explained the Daughters merely rented their hall for a Russian war relief program; that the "Internationale" is only one of the numbers played by the Boston symphony orchestra for the entertainment of a distinctly "stiff shirt" audience. But it's peculiar, anyway, and it shows how wars bring about extraordinary incidents.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
APR 1 - 1942

Boston Symphony Draws Brilliant Throng From Official, Resident Circles

Many Dinners Precede Concert for Russian Relief; Litvinoffs Are Hosts

By Katharine Brooks

Mrs. Roosevelt returned by plane yesterday in time to attend the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra given in Constitution Hall for the benefit of Russian relief. The services of the orchestra as well as the conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, were donated, and judging by the lack of empty seats last evening, the Russian Relief Fund will be considerably augmented. Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former United States Ambassador to Moscow, was chairman for the benefit and returned a day or so ago from her Florida home, where she has been for the winter, to attend the concert last evening. During Mrs. Davies' absence her vice chairmen, Mrs. Emory Scott Land, wife of the chairman of the Maritime Commission, and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, wife of the President's military aide, carried on the work.

The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff were hosts to 50 or 60 guests after the concert, entertaining in the Embassy in honor of Dr. Koussevitzky. Those invited were close personal friends of the hosts and the conductor, and a number of those who have helped to make the benefit a success.

Wallaces Are Guests Of Mrs. Roosevelt.

The Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace were guests of the President's wife in her box at the concert, and also with Mrs. Roosevelt was Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, daughter-in-law of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, who is spending a few days at the White House.

The Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff had with them in their box the Counselor of the Embassy and Mme. Gromyko and Mme. Yegoriechev, wife of the Naval Attache.

Mr. and Mrs. Davies had on one side of them the former's son-in-law and daughter, Senator and Mrs. Millard E. Tydings, and Mrs. Merrall MacNeille, daughter of Mrs. Davies, had the box on the other side. Mr. and Mrs. Davies' guests included a number from out of town, including Mr. and Mrs. James Hill of Pittsburgh, Lt. Comdr. Gene Markey of California and Mr. Hans Habe of New York. Among those with Senator and Mrs. Tydings was the latter's sister, Mrs. Rahel Fitch. After the concert they all attended the supper party at the Soviet Embassy.

Morgenthaus Are Hosts At Dinner Before Concert.

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., were hosts at dinner to the Brazilian Ambassador and Senhora de Martins and Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and later took their guests to their box at Constitution Hall.

The Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Jesse H. Jones had a box, in which Mrs. Jones was hostess to Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, while the Secretary dined with the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles. The Attorney General and Mrs. Francis Biddle are in Florida, where they have gone for the latter's recuperation from an illness, and gave their box away. The Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Harold L. Ickes also were among the boxholders.

Lord and Lady Halifax Are Hosts at Concert.

His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador and Lady Halifax were hosts in their box to Air Marshall D. C. S. Evill, Field Marshal Sir John Dill and Lady Dill and Mrs. Edwina d'Erlanger, who dined with them before the concert.

The Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Close did not entertain their guests for the concert at dinner because of the early hour for the program and the fact that Mrs. Close remained on duty at the British War Relief headquarters showing the interesting things in the South African exhibit which will close tomorrow.

Sitting with them at the concert were Mr. and Mrs. Nowell Elmslie of London, who recently came to Washington, where Mr. Elmslie is on a special mission. Mr. Elmslie was British trade commissioner in South Africa for some years and the Minister and Mrs. Close knew them then. Also with them in their box was the Secretary of the Legation, Mr. Robert Webster.

The Canadian Minister and Mrs. McCarthy took a box for the concert but left earlier yesterday for Canada, where they will be until after Easter. Their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John McCarthy, were hosts in their absence, entertaining at dinner at the Legation and taking their guests with them to their box in Constitution Hall. Dining with them were Miss Toinette Bachelder and Mr. and Mrs. Leonid Techwinisky of Annapolis. Others in the diplomatic corps who subscribed to boxes were the Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun, the Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon and the Icelandic Minister and Mrs. Thors. Also among the boxholders were the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs and Mme. Soong, the Military Attache of the Embassy and Mme. Chu and Sir Arthur Salter of the British Mission and Lady Salter.

The Norwegian Minister and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne were among the guests of the former United States Minister to Norway, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, with whom they dined before the concert. The Yugoslav Minister and Mme. Fotitch were in the box with the Special Adviser to the State Department and Mrs. James Clement Dunn.

Many Other Dinners Precede Symphony.

Associate Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, who seldom miss good music, shared a box with Associate Justice and Mrs. James F. Byrnes and Mrs. Chandler Hale. Associate Justice and Mrs. Stanley F. Reed were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Max O'Rell Truitt, whose other guests included the hostess' father, Senator Alben W. Barkley; former United States Ambassador to Moscow, Mr. William C. Bullitt; former Assistant to the Attorney General and Mrs. William Stanley, Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer and Mrs. Alva S. Hewitt. Mr. and Mrs. Truitt were hosts to their guests at dinner before the concert.

Mrs. George T. Marye, widow of former United States Ambassador to Russia, had with her Mr. and Mrs. George Baker of California, brother and sister-in-law of the late former director of the mint, Mr. Raymond T. Baker. Among others with Mrs. Marye was Countess Marguerite Cassini. After the concert Mrs. Marye took her guests to the Mayflower for supper.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
APR 1 - 1942

Patriotic Fervor Kindled In Russian Relief Concert

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Present Spectacular Program In Constitution Hall

By ALICE EVERSMAN.

The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the Russian War Relief last night in Constitution Hall proved to be the most stirring event in many musical seasons. It was spectacular, emotionally high pitched and the greatest union of music with patriotic feeling that the D. A. R. hall has ever witnessed. In its setting as well as in Serge Koussevitzky's conducting of the program, it expressed the unfaltering sentiments of the United Nations in the conflict in which they are engaged.

The spirit of the occasion was established with the entrance through the hall of the United States Marine Drum and Bugle Corps and the march down the side isles of other marines carrying the flags of the 26 United Nations. From a table at the side of the stage, a speaker from the New York office of the Russian War Relief mentioned each nation and its part in the war as the flags were placed at each end of the stage. The audience, on its feet, cheered and applauded with wildest enthusiasm during the ceremony, quieting only when Dr. Koussevitzky came on the podium to direct the playing of the national anthems of the U. S. S. R. and the United States.

Soviet Anthem Melodic.

Melodic in character and noble in design, the Soviet anthem has dignity and appeal. Dr. Koussevitzky played it in measured fashion and in the same manner conducted the "Star Spangled Banner," giving it a beautiful and uplifting performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky left the stage for a moment before starting the program proper, which consisted of works of two composers of modern Russia, Prokofieff's "Classical Symphony" and Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 6," and of old Russia, Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 5."

All three of these works have been heard here before, Prokofieff's twice recently, Shostakovich's in December and Tschaikowsky's many times. Rarely, however, has the national flavor as expressed in the different temperaments, ideas and environment of the composers been so thoroughly and sympathetically given out as in Koussevitzky's reading. He has the ability to feel with the composer not only in a musical sense but in the deeper spirit that brought forth his work.

The magnificent orchestral body that Koussevitsky has under his baton, with its organlike quality of tone and interpretive sensitiveness, is especially qualified for the performance of such colorful music. It played superbly last evening, pliably reacting to the minute and vivid indications of the conductor.

Koussevitsky is a master of time values and instrumental color. Emotionally inspired, he yet has the poise that seeks for the rounded phrase, for the perfect note and for the full and unhampered play of individual voices of the orchestra. This measured approach in interpretation allows nothing to be lost and brings a constant surprise at the beauty of some phrase that is often overshadowed by orchestral volume. In fact, the full sonority of the orchestra is seldom called upon but rather made subservient to the expressive color of different instruments.

"Sixth Symphony" Dramatic.

This was particularly noticeable in the Shostakovich symphony, where its moods are voiced in changing tonal color and its powerful climaxes built through this means. The "Sixth Symphony" reflects a deeper thought than the composer's preceding works in this style, with a Sibelius touch evident in the first movement. The somber, brooding atmosphere is complete in itself and the two lighter movements that follow seem irreverent. Unlike Prokofieff, whose delightful "Classical Symphony" held a keener note of contrast in Koussevitzky's reading, the "Sixth Symphony" was highly dramatic in the pointed manner in which the conductor permitted the time element to have full play and in the varying character of his dynamics.

The high spot of the program, however, and of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting, was the Tschaikowsky symphony. It was moving for its deep emotional feeling which the conductor sensed to a special degree and for its transcendence above the mere mechanics of music, finely as they were considered in Dr. Koussevitzky's reading. On rare occasions and through a great interpretive insight, the melody of music is forgotten and its spiritual meaning becomes particularly illumined and the performance of the Tschaikowsky was one of these. The enthusiasm of the audience broke all bounds and the visiting conductor and the orchestra were overwhelmed with applause, bringing to a supreme climax this concert of unusual excellence.

After the intermission, Edward C. Carter, president of the Russian War Relief, introduced by Senator Barkley, told of the objectives of the organization and made an appeal for funds.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 1 - 1942

Washington Aids Russian Relief at Evening Concert

'The Internationale' Heard in D. A. R. Hall; Mrs. Joseph E. Davies Heads Benefit

Special to the Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Soviet Russia's national anthem, "The Internationale," was played tonight in Constitution Hall, owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, before an audience that included Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Vice-President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace. It was the first time in the memory of Washington residents that the song had been heard there.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who returned today by airplane from Seattle, where she visited her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger, was hostess to the Vice-President and his wife. The occasion was a concert the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor, gave for the benefit of Russian relief. The orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky donated their services and every seat and every box was sold.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former American Ambassador to Moscow, was chairman. She returned a few days ago from Florida, where she passed the winter. In her absence Mrs. Emory Scott Land, wife of the chairman of the Maritime Commission, and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, wife of the President's military aide, as vice-chairman, carried on the work.

Mrs. Roosevelt and Mr. and Mrs. Wallace were accompanied by Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, who is a guest at the White House.

The Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Maxim Litvinov were hosts at a buffet supper after the program in honor of Dr. Koussevitzky. With them in their box at the concert were members of the embassy staff.

The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau jr. had as their guests at an advance dinner the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins and Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

Associate Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts shared a box with Associate Justice and Mrs. James F. Byrnes and Mrs. Chandler Hale. Associate Justice and Mrs. Stanley F. Reed were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Max O'Rell Truitt, who also were hosts to Mrs. Truitt's father, Senator Alben W. Barkley; the former American Ambassador to Moscow, Mr. William C. Bullitt; Mr. William Stanley, former assistant to the Attorney General, and Mrs. Stanley; Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer and Mrs. Alva S. Hewitt.

Lord and Lady Halifax were hosts to Air Marshal D. C. S. Evill, Field Marshall Sir John Dill and Lad

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 1 - 1942

Koussevitzky Offers Soviet Relief Program

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

No concert in Constitution Hall has been more effectively staged than the one played last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, for Russian war relief.

When the U. S. Marine Drum and Bugle Corps led the Marine Corps color bearers in trim military procession and drummed them on and off the stage as the flags of the United Nations were arranged in standards, the public and the orchestra got a thrill.

"Internationale" Played

As this solemn rite was performed, an announcer read stirring words into the public address system. So the hearts of the listeners were warmed and prepared for the playing of "The Internationale"—as set by Aaron Copland, there being no official Russian version available—and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

It followed that Koussevitzky's musical address was heard with quickened sympathies and emotions deeply moved by an exciting and impressive prelude. Not that this great musician needs such preparation. He is a master of a musical diction that can be likened only to that of Maurice Evans, of Gielgud, of, for the elder generation, Richard Mansfield.

It is compelling. It defines but it also penetrates to the hidden meanings. It searches out the sources of the composer's inspiration. It paints vast pictures, conjures scenes of comedy or of tragedy, and joins the daring, fantastic, alert, witty, powerful art of Russia's exciting present to the traditional gloom of Russia's artistic past.

Shakespearean Figure

Koussevitzky is in his person a Shakespearean figure. He has an actor's profile and makes a grave and dignified entrance, pacing slowly to the podium. He is sparing of gesture; but when he employs urgent pantomime, it has significance for performers and listeners alike.

He began this memorable musical address by quoting Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich. The first is sufficiently familiar to enable the listener to realize how much that is new his baton discovered in a witty and charming work. Koussevitzky found beauty where others have found only irony. Yet he did not disturb the composer's satire, though he made it a bit milder.

Then he turned to the Sixth Symphony by Shostakovich, a composition which has had but two previous performances here. Again one was grateful for the repetition. If Prokofieff bade somewhat flippant farewell to the classic era of the art, Shostakovich plunges boldly into that new world of hope, courage, and achievement that spreads so bravely across the Russian scene.

New Kind of Magic

Again the Shakespearean touch wrought a kind of magic that set strange parallels of expression in motion to lead the listener's imagination past new horizons. These seemed to expand into dim distance or to converge in powerful mountain crests of sonority, all so clearly defined, yet so filled with feeling that the total effect was as persuasive as the now popular Fifth Symphony by the same master.

Koussevitzky closed his discourse with the too familiar pageantry of Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony. Yet even here he found new or at least deeply personal meanings to quicken jaded reactions. So it was a great concert in which an artist of power and imagination played upon a superbly resourceful instrument.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra deserves its prestige. It is an old orchestra. Perhaps some of its members count as many years as the orchestra itself, which are 61. But these older musicians are as quick and keen, and as responsive as the younger ensembles growing up around them. The popular belief that the world belongs to youth finds drastic refutation here. It is a great orches-

HIGH LIGHT AT SOVIET BENEFIT.
Among the many notables, headed by Mrs. Roosevelt, who assembled in Constitution Hall last night for an all-Russian program were (left to right) the Co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Mr. Nelson A. Rockefeller; Mrs. Rockefeller and Maj. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, military aide and secretary to the President. —Harris-Ewing Photo.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR
APR 1 - 1942

of music with his soup at lunch. Across the desk sat Serge Koussevitsky, Russian symphonic conductor. For a short hour, the two men talked music, the President recalled his favorites, hummed snatches of them

PRESS: The President greeted the press with a broad smile, waving a heavy gavel. Looking rested and ready for another dozen rounds, Mr. Roosevelt carried his conference lightly in the palm of his hand, gave the boys the best laugh of the week off-the-record on the subject of Dies revelations of nudism in BEW.

SOUP MUSIC: Mr. Roosevelt, who loves music, got a big dish

MARSHALLTOWN, IA.
TIMES-REPUBLICAN
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
APR 1 - 1942

Red Flag and The Internationale Hailed in D.A.R.'s Constitution Hall

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Maxim Litvinoff and Wife Among Audience at Russian-Sponsored War Relief Program.

WASHINGTON, April 1 (AP).—Amid applause from a fashionable audience of 4000, the red banner of Soviet Russia was carried to the platform of Constitution Hall, which was built and is owned by outspoken opponents of Communism, the Daughters of the American Revolution, last night.

The presentation of the flags of the 26 United Nations—the Soviet banner among them—was an impressive high spot on the Russian war relief program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and for this concert the sponsors rented the stronghold of the D. A. R., the capital's only large auditorium.

Included in the rental fee were ushers with D. A. R. armbands. They stood at attention as did Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet Ambassador; Mme. Litvinoff; Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the audience as Serge Koussevitzky conducted the playing of the Internationale and the Star Spangled Banner.

It was the first time that the Soviet national anthem had been played in the American capital by a major orchestra, and certainly the first time by anyone from the platform of Constitution Hall.

To the Soviet Ambassador and his English-born wife, the playing of the Internationale was a dramatic moment. Both squared their shoulders at the opening strains. The Ambassador pursed his lips. Mme. Litvinoff looked out over the audience, solemn and intent.

"It was thrilling to hear it played by that big orchestra," said Mme. Litvinoff afterward back stage as she and the Ambassador waited to greet Koussevitzky during an intermission. "The times I've heard it played in the Red Square in Moscow!"

Mme. Litvinoff wore a crepe turquoise gown with a corsage of nasturtiums. She carried a fan the color of the flowers, and she related it had been given her by Mrs. Francis Sayre, wife of the United States High Commissioner in the Philippines, when the Litvinoffs stopped at Manila en route to the United States just before the Japanese attack.

"I decided I wouldn't carry the fan until I heard that Mrs. Sayre was safe," said Mme. Litvinoff. "Tonight I can use it." Sayre recently arrived in Washington, and it is understood that his wife is coming here shortly.

The list of patrons was headed by President Roosevelt, who seldom lends his name to a cause, and Mrs. Roosevelt.

[162]

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

APR 1 - 1942

Postlude

Boston Symphony Heard In Russian War Relief Concert

By Ray C. B. Brown

Sergei Koussevitzki conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall on Tuesday night in a concert for the benefit of Russian war relief. Program: "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25 (Prokofiev). Symphony No. 6, Op. 53 (Shostakovich), Symphony No. 5, Op. 64 (Chaikovski).

Absent from Washington since April 3, 1935, Dr. Sergei Koussevitzki and the Boston Symphony Orchestra received a tumultuous welcome last evening when they returned to Constitution Hall for the express purpose of giving their services in a concert for the benefit of Russian war relief. The crowded autorium held a thoroughly representative assemblage of official, diplomatic and musical personages in the National Capital, and a glance around the boxes and the serried ranks of seats fell upon people who had apparently stepped from the pages of the local "Wha's Who."

Brown

Pomp and circumstance attended the preliminaries of the concert which were symbolical of the special occasion. Witht he orchestra on the stage and the auditors in their places, the drum and bugle corps of the United States Marines marched down the center aisle sounding a salute and followed by color-bearers carrying the flags of the 26 nations united against Hitlerism. To the accompaniment of appropriate words from an announcer over the loudspeaker, each flag was presented to the spectators with a fanfare of bugles.

While the auditors still stood at attention, Dr. Koussevitzki entered amid a storm of applause and directed the "Internationale" in Aaron Copland's new arrangement and "The Star-Spangled Banner." Showered with more plaudits, he then retired for an interval during which the auditors settled themselves expectantly and waited for what they had come to hear.

Seven years is a long time to keep in memory exactly how an orchestra sounds and many of us had forgotten to a certain degree the superb tone quality of the Bostonians. Just what constitutes the tone of an orchestra is a mystery which no critic has been able to explain satisfactorily. Primarily, of course, the tone emanates from the strings because they are the leading voices of the ensemble, but why the tone of one string section differs from another remains a recondite matter.

Whatever the reason, the combination of the Boston tone and Sergei Koussevitzki is unique. The two work together with an irresistible magic which vivifies the colors of instruments, subtlizes accents and animates dynamics to the point of supreme eloquence. It was an unalloyed pleasure to hear again such blendings of tints and such balancings of timbres.

Prokofiev's "Classical" symphony, with which the program opened, is no stranger here, but Dr. Koussevitzki's reading underlined as no other that I have heard the significance of the title. By that I mean that he kept the dynamics entirely within the frame of the classical orchestra of Mozart's day. The lightness and the delicacy of the performance delighted the connoiseur of miniature precision.

The novelty of the concert was Shostakovich's sixth symphony which had been performed here only once before the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski on December 10, 1940. Whether it was the revision of the score by the composer or the insight of Dr. Koussevitzki that made the difference, last evening's disclosure of the music seemed absolutely new. The meaning of the work came out with a clarity and a power that made a fresh impact upon the consciousness.

Undoubtedly Shostakovich has grown in the ability to express emotion and has sloughed off many of the mischievous mannerisms that retarded his development. There is a dignity in the sixth symphony that marks his emergencies as a spokesman for his nation. He has ceased being the Russian playboy and is uttering significant messages to the world.

The concert closed with Chaikovski's familiar fifth symphony touched into unexpected bloom by Dr. Koussevitzki's hands. He conducted it lovingly and fervently with a full revelation of its essential beauties.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM

APR 2 - 1942

The Revolution's On! Society Applauds 'The Internationale'

By James A. Wechsler
PM's Bureau

WASHINGTON, Apr. 2.—Washington's society pages yesterday brought utter mental chaos to Dies Committee analysts and orthodox Marxists. For society's biggest news was the Russian Relief Concert attended by hundreds of strange bedfellows in ermine and boiled shirts who militantly applauded the playing of the Internationale and beamed lovingly at Maxim Litvinov. It all happened Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. The Hall is owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The society editors gave the event glowing notices. Betty Hynes, columnist for "Cissie" Patterson's Times-Herald (which combines the most anti-Soviet features of Hearst and the New York Daily News) hailed this outpouring of Washington notables as "sealing the alliance" of the U. S. A. and the USSR. "Cissie" herself was one of the box-holders.

The News's Evelyn Peyton Gordon described it more modestly as "the greatest social triumph in the career of Maxim Litvinov."

The Washington Post's Patricia Grady seemed most impressed by the fact that "Capital society rushed in from dinners before the event and rushed on afterwards to suppers." The rush was apparently terrific.

"It was a cheering audience from the beginning with the Russian Ambassador and Madame Litvinov taking the first bows from their corner box," Miss Grady reported.

Nonunion Orchestra

The concert was donated to the Soviets by Serge Koussevitsky's nonunion Boston Symphony Orchestra, but the music drew less attention than the turnout, Miss Gordon noted a trifle cynically.

For the benefit of Russian War Relief, "the Capital turned out in full array: Society, officials, diplomats, sincere Soviet sympathizers, true music lovers."

V. I. Lenin may have stirred perceptibly in his tomb as the multitude assembled. There was, for example, a distinguished representation from the Capitol's antilabor bloc: Sen. Tom Connally, who has promised to keep "a-raising hell" until his antilabor bill is passed; Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ralph Bard, who has been busy opposing the Wage-Hour Law and urging relaxation of the Wagner Act, and Sen. Millard Tydings, Maryland Tory. Sen. Tydings, however, is the son-in-law of Joseph E. Davies, ex-Ambassador to Moscow and staunch Soviet supporter. Mrs. Davies and Mrs. Tydings were leading sponsors of the concert.

There were other baffling notes from an ideological point of view. James Clement Dunn, long noted as a Franco booster and Soviet foe in the State Dept., occupied a box with Mrs. Dunn and the Yugoslav emissaries. Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, whose late husband led the post-war Red-hunt, was present in a box with Senate Majority Leader Alben Barkley, who delivered the keynote address.

Heavens! A Philistine

Mrs. Evalyn McLean, recently depicted by the Communists as leader of the Washington "Cliveden Set" confused dogmatists by purchasing a box for the affair and was listed as a patroness. Although she didn't show up, a Washington society reporter assured me her absence wasn't significant because:

"Mrs. McLean never goes to concerts. She only attends the theater."

In addition to Washington's smart set and right-wing, there were of course an ample number of New Dealers whose presence may some day be recalled by Mr. Dies (who was not present). President Roosevelt-himself sponsored the concert and Mrs. Roosevelt was present. So were Harry Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Archibald McLeish, and Sidney Hillman.

But perhaps the most intriguing item in the concert's ideological bedlam concerns Lady Cunard. The Times-Herald's Miss Haynes's review of the concert said:

"With Miss Mabel Boardman, and the center of many eyes, was Lady Cunard, gowned in blue."

On the same page co-columnist Igor Cassini, in his daily gush entitled These Charming People, simultaneously reported:

"Lady Cunard's stopping at the Spanish Embassy with the Cardenases rather than with Lord and Lady Halifax at the British Embassy is a little surprising. American-born Lady Cunard, a friend of the Duke of Windsor, possesses one of the most influential names of England, and to outsiders it looks strange that she should be the guest of the envoy of Fascist Spain. Or isn't that a sign that the Uppah Clawss in England has always been more on the side of Franco than the Spanish Commies?"

Did Lady Cunard tell M. Cardenas where she went Tuesday night?

TERRE HAUTE, IND.
STAR

APR 2 1942

RANDOM NOTES.

The incredible events derived from the unusual circumstances of war are so many and varied that one loses the ability to be surprised—perhaps it should be said that one almost loses the ability to be surprised by any development. This is particularly true if the event happens in Washington. But out of Washington comes an astonishing story, bordering on the unbelievable.

It might be recalled that not so long ago the Daughters of the American Revolution refused the use of Constitution Hall, which the organization owns, for a concert by Marian Anderson. There was no apparent reason except that Miss Anderson, one of the great singers of all time, happens to be colored. Mrs. Roosevelt resigned from the organization and there was great stir in many quarters. But consider what happens now. It is one of those believe it or not matters although we are willing to trust the authenticity of the report by the Associated Press.

The Internationale, national anthem of Soviet Russia, has been played in Constitution Hall! At last report, the walls were still standing and no patriot had suffered apoplexy. The Daughters were not responsible but they had rented the hall for a Russia relief concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

APR 2 - 1942

Morning Musicale Given In Soviet Embassy

The morning musicale which the Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinoff gave yesterday was something of an aftermath of the brilliantly successful Russian relief benefit of the evening before. The guests were chosen from official and diplomatic circles, a number of them having been among those at the buffet supper which the Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinoff gave after the concert. The hostess wore a simple black street-length morning frock and the program was given by a string quintet, the members chosen from the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which donated its services for the concert Tuesday evening, and the conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzki, was escorted yesterday morning to a front-row seat by the Ambassador.

The buffet table, from which luncheon was served after the hour of music, was laid in the dining room with bright spring blossoms in cases down the center of the table. Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres were served before the music began and between the numbers. The quintet was composed of Roland Tavley and Malcolm Holmes, violins; Judge Humphrey, viola; Karl Zeise, cello, and Jesu Maria Sanroma, piano.

GALVESTON, TEX.
NEWS

APR 2 - 1942

Nothing will surprise us any more since the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the Internationale in the DAR's Constitution Hall in Washington. It wasn't April fool's day, either, and the roof didn't fall.

GENEVA, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 3 - 1942

SITUATION CHANGED

The world certainly "do move." If you don't think so just rub your eyes and read this, and believe it or not. But you will have to believe it, for "It really did happen, and 4,000 people today can testify that it did," says an Associated Press dispatch from Washington.

And here is what it tells about:

"Amid applause from a fashionable audience, the red banner of Soviet Russia was brought onto the platform of Constitution Hall, built and owned by outspoken opponents of Communism, the Daughters of the American Revolution.

"The presentation of the flags of the 26 United Nations—the Soviet banner among them—was an impressive high spot on the Russian War Relief program given last night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and for this concert, brilliant in content and in attendance, the sponsors rented the stronghold of the DAR, the capital's only large auditorium.

"Included in the rental fee were ushers with DAR armbands. They stood at attention as did Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet ambassador; Madame Litvinoff; Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and the audience as Serge Koussevitzky conducted the playing of the Internationale and the Star Spangled Banner.

'It was the first time the Soviet national anthem had been played in the American Capital by a major orchestra, and certainly the first time by anyone from the platform of Constitutional Hall."

Wonder what the good women of the D. A. R. think about this use of their honored hall, which they cannot even use themselves this year, having been forced to hold their annual congress in Chicago instead of Washington on account of the crowded condition of the Capital. Thus does the war bring about many unexpected changes and circumstances.

But as for the red Soviet banner, it's on our side now, even if it does seem incongruous for it to be floating aloft with the Stars and Stripes.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

APR 1 - 1942

To Present New Symphony Of Young Soviet Composer

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are expected to play before a capacity audience tonight at 8:30 when they make their eighth appearance in this city in as many years at the College avenue gymnasium. The event will close the 26th annual Rutgers University concert series.

Russian-born Dr. Koussevitzky will present a program of works by Russian composers, featuring the new Sixth Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch, widely acclaimed young Soviet composer. Only non-Russian selection will be Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony in C Minor, opus 41.

This composition of Mozart sometimes considered his best work, will open the concert. It will be followed by the fantasy-overture by Tschaikowsky, "Romeo and Juliet."

The Shostakovitch symphony will bring the evening to a close. Finished only about a year ago, the work is an effort in the new Russian style—simple and direct, and although guided and inspired by the great music of the past, expressive of the idiom that is of today.

The Sixth Symphony received a warm ovation at its first performance in Boston and has been included in concerts of the orchestra for the past few weeks, marking the first time in the history of the orchestra that a composition has been repeated within a week.

Dr. Koussevitzky made an early beginning in his field. At the age of 11 years he was conducting the orchestra of his native town. He continued his musical education at the Conservatory in Moscow, from which he graduated in 1894 with the degree of Master of Free Arts. After a successful series of tours of the European continent, he became conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra in 1908.

He soon returned to Russia, but the shadow of the revolution followed him and by a circuitous route he finally arrived in the United States. Recognition of his talent in this country was not slow in coming. Among other awards, he was presented with the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters during his appearance at Rutgers in 1937. Dr. Robert C. Clothier paid tribute to the conductor's life-long devotion to music.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

APR 2 - 1942

[163]

Wirephoto: Meet at Russian Benefit

Wirephoto: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt reaches out to shake hands with Miss Mabel T. Boardman (left), secretary of the American Red Cross, as they sat in adjoining boxes Tuesday night at a Russian war relief concert by the Boston symphony orchestra in Washington. Madame Mardt Auffmordt is between them. (AP)

BRISTOL, VA.
HERALD-COURIER

APR 2 - 1942

Strange Things Can Happen.

Constitutional Hall in Washington is owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Hall can not be used by any group or organization for any purpose without the consent of the Daughters, who more than once have refused its use to a group or organization which did not meet with their approval.

Among the groups or organizations which do not meet with the approval of the Daughters of the American Revolution are the Communists. The Communist philosophy is among the Daughters' pet aversions; they have denounced it many times; but the Internationale, the National Anthem of Communist Russia, has just been played in Constitution Hall, and the Red Flag has been displayed on its platform.

The occasion was the Boston Symphony Concert for the benefit of Russian war relief. Serge Koussevitzky, an American citizen born in Russia, conducted the 115-piece orchestra in a program that was all-Russian with but one exception. The exception was the Star-Spangled Banner, our own National Anthem, which was the first number on the program.

The Daughters of the American Revolution did not sponsor the event, but they permitted it to be held in Constitution Hall, the Capital's only large auditorium, which seats close to 4,000 people. And the auditorium was crowded. The all-Russian program attracted an estimated 4,000 people, most of them leaders in society and politics at Washington.

The program was heard and enjoyed by a fashionable audience. The concert was brilliant in content and in attendance, and a neat sum must have been realized for Russian war relief. The orchestra members contributed their performance, and some box tickets brought from $50 to $100. Perhaps only the rental for the Hall will have to be taken out of the proceeds.

Strange things can happen. Yet it may not be so strange that the Daughters of the American Revolution allowed Constitution Hall to be used for this event. The Daughters realize that Russia is fighting alongside the United States against a menace to world freedom; that if the Axis Powers win the war, neither Democracy nor Communism will survive; and that if the war is won by the United Nations, they may then settle any differences among them over political philosophies or ideologies.

The United Nations—the United States Great Britain, Russia, China and other countries—will stand or fall together. If the Democracies are to be saved, they will be saved only with the help of Communist Russia. It is time every American realized this and ceased to worry about Communism for the duration. What we of this country need to worry about is the possibility that the Totalitarian aggressors will win the war and impose their rule on the United States Great Britain, China and the rest of the world.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

APR 2 - 1942

Thrilling Russian Relief Concert in Capital Reflects Soviet-U. S. Unity

(Daily Worker Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON, April 1. — Dramatic proof of the close friendship between the Soviet Union and the United States was given last night when all of official Washington turned out to pay tribute to the heroic peoples of the USSR at a Russian War Relief benefit concert.

Sponsored by President Roosevelt, the entire Supreme Court, the cabinet, high government officials, and prominent Washingtonians, the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall was one of the most brilliant events the Capital has ever witnessed.

The theme of the evening, the unity of the 26 nations who have banded together to crush the Axis, was reflected in the colorful presentation of the 26 flags by blue uniformed Marines and in the attendance of top diplomatic representatives of these countries.

READ M'ARTHUR TRIBUTE

As the stirring words of General Douglas MacArthur were read that "the hopes of civilization rest upon the worthy banners of the Russian Army," the impressive audience of 4,000 roared its appreciation for the valiant fight of the Soviet people.

Senator Alben Barkley, Senate Majority Leader, spoke for the entire crowd when he stated that help must be sent to the USSR for:

"At this hour it is our front also, no less than the Russian front."

From the Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff who were greeted with warm applause on their arrival the cheering crowd went on to welcome Mrs. Roosevelt, Vice-President and Mrs. Henry Wallace, Lord and Lady Halifax, Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau, Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone and scores of other celebrities.

DAR'S HALL

The gala performance took place in Constitution Hall, home of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the strains of the "Internationale" rang out where for many years the DAR has vigorously denounced "the Bolshevist menace." Indicative of the new spirit of unity to defeat the Axis, was the fact that the DAR had taken a box for the occasion.

The concert was opened with an impressive military ceremony by the U. S. Marine Drum and Bugle Corps and the color bearers who presented the flags of the 26 United Nations. "In the year 1776 a new nation held certain trusts to be self evident," the commentator chanted. "166 years later, 26 nations from all parts of the world renunciated these truths, and united in one cause, the destruction of Hitlerism."

"To the flag of England, in the name of the British men who have died—to the flag of China, whose suffering millions would die to a man to be free," . . . the commentator delivered a tribute as each country's flag was brought up on the platform.

The audience and orchestra stood proudly at attention while the banners of the Latin American Republics, the nations now fighting the Japanese in the Pacific, and the conquered countries of Europe were displayed.

RED FLAG CHEERED

Thundering applause greeted the red flag of the USSR, "whose soldiers first destroyed the myth of Nazi invincibility," and the Stars and Stripes of the United States.

As the flags of the USSR and the U. S. fluttered in front, the Boston Symphony stirringly played the "Internationale" and the "Star Spangled Banner," then the audience settled down to hear the orchestra give a splendid rendition of Prokofieff's classical symphony, Shostakovitch's Sixth Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

The committee which arranged the concert was headed by Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former Ambassador to the USSR, Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, wife of Presidential Aide Brig. Gen. Watson, and Mrs. Emory Scott Land, wife of the Maritime Commissioner. Others on the committee included Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Harold Ickes, Mrs. Sumner Welles, and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace.

RAISE $12,700

Services of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, were donated and it was estimated by Mrs. Davies today that close to $12,700 had been raised for Russian War Relief. The money will be used toward purchasing medical supplies for the wounded, and seed and grain for the areas the Soviet Union has recently retaken from the Nazis.

Among the prominent persons who attended the concert to "honor the Russian people, the Russian government and the Russian Army for their heroic part in the great struggle we are now fighting," were:

Former Ambassador Joseph Davies, Counsellor of the Soviet Embassy and Mme. Gromyko, together with the rest of the Embassy staff, Dutch Minister and Mme. London, Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, Mr. and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, Mr. and Mrs. William Batt, representatives of every embassy and legation in town, and hundreds of other outstanding Washingtonians.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 2 - 1942

Mme Litvinov's Musicale Draws Many Notables

Boston Symphony Quintette Features Embassy Function

If Maxim Litvinov, Soviet Russia's ambassador, is a great statesman, his wife is an equally gracious hostess. Yesterday morning she presided over her first musicale at the embassy when the Boston Symphony Orchestra quintette played for a gathering of official, diplomatic, and residential society.

Among the striking personalities in the audience was the orchestra's conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, who was evidently well pleased with the playing and program.

As the guests thronged up the wide staircase soon after 11 o'clock, Mme. Litvinov greeted them smilingly and asked them if they would like a cocktail—an invitation many accepted. Soon the Ambassador appeared with the famed conductor, but refused to be seated before he had "shooed" members of his staff from an adjoining room into the ballroom to hear the music.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wearing a gay green hat with an otherwise severely tailored costume, arrived with her debutante daughter, Nedenia, whose blue bonnet matched her eyes; Mrs. Jerome Hill, of Pittsburgh, who has been visiting her, and Mrs. Millard Tydings. Mrs. Edwin M. Watson and Mrs. Emory Scott Land, who had been Mrs. Davies, cochairmen for the eminently successful Russian Relief concert, appeared soon after, the former accompanied by Mrs. Stanley Woodward.

The wives of the Supreme Court Justices, headed by Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, had almost a perfect record of attendance. Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, sitting beside Mrs. Frank Walker, wife of the Postmaster General; Mrs. Stanley Reed, saying the gathering seemed like the continuance of the night before, when Ambassador and Mme. Litvinov had a supper party for Koussevitzky; Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, who took a chair next to the wife of the New Zealand Minister, Mrs. Walter Nash; Mrs. James F. Byrnes, looking pretty under her new grape-trimmed hat, and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt was stunning, all in black; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman sat just ahead of Mme. Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Minister, and the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban were evidently fascinated with the Shostakovitch composition.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 2 - 1942

LITVINOFF MUSICALE HONORS COMPOSER

Shostakovich Quintet Heard at Soviet Embassy in Washington

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 1 — The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff gave a musicale this morning at the Embassy for the debut performance here of the Shostakovich quintet, opus 57, of the distinguished Russian composer, which won for him the Stalin prize of 100,000 rubles sixteen months ago.

Played for the first time at the Soviet music festival of Nov. 30, 1940, it was presented today by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who gave a benefit concert last night in Constitution Hall for the Russian War Relief Fund. It was received with rounds of applause by the guests.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of last night's program, of which the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich was a part, was a guest at this morning's musicale.

Among others present were the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban; Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Mrs. Owen Roberts, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Robert Jackson, and Mrs. James F. Byrnes of the Supreme Court circle, and Mme. Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Minister.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 2 - 1942

Soviet Embassy Recital Honors Koussevitzky

Modern Russian Piano, Chamber Music Played

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the Boston Symphony in Constitution Hall Tuesday night, was honored at the Soviet Embassy yesterday morning by a recital featuring modern Russian piano and chamber compositions.

Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinov invited a small group of diplomats and music lovers to hear the Tanglewood Quartet and Jesus Maria San Roma, Puerto Rican pianist long eminent in Boston's musical life, present the Shostakovich quintet. This is the work which won the composer the 100,000-rouble Stalin prize in 1940. Shostakovich donated this sum to war relief.

Gains With Understanding

To the American admirer of this gifted man's art, growing understanding seems to increase its value. As to its racial aspects his fellow countrymen are, of course, the only competent judges. But to alien ears, the music of Shostakovich seems to have added qualities of introspection to his country's cultural expression.

The work has power. It has deep poetry. It develops the defined states of feeling in logical sequence, seeming to condition its thematic elaboration by predetermined emotional requirements. Great beauty is unfolded by this process but rarely is it the beauty of mere sentiment. The quintet shares with the symphonies the excitements of broad contrasts and urgent movement.

It begins with a modern Russian version of the contrapuntal prelude and fugue, exploited for its adaptability to cumulative climaxes. Form is incidental in the art of Shostakovich, which owes its power to a quality of direct if rarely obvious melodic eloquence. Its technical elements are beautifully ordered and the joint utterance of strings and piano is intriguing for its own sake.

Performance Admirable

The performance was entirely admirable. The Tanglewood Players have wrought a sensitive ensemble that is especially rich in its command of widely varied sonorities. Mr. San Roma's piano was flawlessly adjusted to this dynamic scheme. He prefaced the performance of the quintet by presenting four piano preludes by Prokofieff and as many "Fleeting Visions" by Shostakovich. New, daring, witty, and highly imaginative, both these Russian modernists have enlarged the acoustic resources of the instrument.

After the brilliant novelty of San Roma's playing and the stimulating invention of the Soviet masters, it will be difficult to return at once to the tamer and more familiar beauties of the established repertoire.

The Shostakovich quintet was repeated last night in the Library of Congress, under auspices of the Coolidge Foundation, on which occasion the Dvorak quintet replaced Mr. San Roma's solos on the program.

TACOMA, WASH.
TIMES
APR 2 - 1942

After Many Years

Soviet Music in Constitutional Hall

May Have to Revise Kipling Dictum

Many Sided State's Rights Issue

BY E. T. SHORT

WHAT next in this fast moving world?

About two years ago we were having the jitters because the United States, via Seward peninsula, was separated from Russia only by the narrow Bering strait. That was before the break between Russia and Germany, and the commentators found much good material in exploiting the possibility of Russia slipping across the strait some dark night and establishing a base from which the axis powers might successfully attack the United States.

Then, on June 21, 1941, the Hitler forces attacked Russia. Almost overnight a potential enemy became an ally and we began supplying planes, bombs and other war materials so that the Soviet government could fight the axis.

If you think that was quite a flop, read this:

Tuesday night, in historic constitutional hall in Washington, D. C., owned by the D. A. R., from the platform of which there has come bitter denunciation of the communistic affiliations of the Soviet government, Serge Koussevitsky led the Boston symphony orchestra through a stirring performance of the Soviet national anthem, "The Internationale."

The occasion was a concert of all Russian music, a Russian benefit for which the services of the orchestra had been donated. The program opened with the American national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner." Standing as the 115-piece orchestra played with deep feeling and vigor were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and a White House party.

Scarcely had the last echoes of the American anthem died away when the orchestra crashed into the first strains of "The Internationale."

It may be that when Mr. Kipling wrote his "east is east and west is west," it looked as if the twain never would meet. Today it is a smart prophet who refuses to predict what strange things this war may do to us.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
APR 13 1942

Revolution

Constitution Hall, owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, resounded last week with the strains of the "Internationale." While the Boston Symphony Orchestra thus opened its Russian War Relief Concert, an enormous scarlet flag emblazoned with a gold hammer and sickle stood out before the emblems of 26 allied nations. Three revolutions scented the evening air: the Russian, the American, and the one to come . . .

'Tis the final conflict
Let each stand in his place!
The International Soviet
Will be the Human Race!

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 3 - 1942

Russian Music Featured by Bostonians

By GRENA BENNETT

Russian music dominated last evening's program presented by the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall. The Russian works consisted of Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 6, and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky evidently aiming to maintain the same horizon in his list, ended the program with Brahm's First Symphony.

In considering the Prokofieff work some music-lovers have gone far afield in their admiration while others insist upon discovering the fly in the ointment, affirming that it mocks its "classic" claim. Yet its delicate charm, the grace and beauty of its melodies; the frank humor that is incorporated into many of its pages have outranked in popularity all of that composer's previous achievements.

Even the most satiated of concert patrons confess without restriction that the "Classical" Symphony retains all of its refreshing appeal at each repetition and if the enthusiasm of last night's audience is evidence, that number was without doubt one of the most enjoyable of the concert.

This was not due entirely to the enchanting score and its excellent craftsmanship but also to the polished brisk and scintillating interpretation by the Boston Band.

Although of vast contrast to the Prokofieff number the Shostakovich Symphony brought a diverting reaction to the auditors.

Its polyphonic arrangement of melodies and the individuality that marks the harmonizations and rhythms are in themselves evocative of interest.

It is a difficult work to elucidate but seemed an easy conquest for last evening's performers.

The music of Brahms' C minor Symphony has seldom sounded so eloquent or has been disclosed in so glowing and masterly a manner.

The import of the superb pages was revealed as a rare blend of romanticism and reflective beauty invested with impetuous drive and emotional appeal.

The hall was completely filled and the generous applause that followed each number was a deserved tribute to the conductor and to the instrumentalists.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

Notables Attend Concert

WASHINGTON

Mrs. Roosevelt attended Serge Koussevitsky's Russian Relief Concert, which was held on Tuesday night at Constitution Hall, having in her box Mrs. Kermet Roosevelt, Mrs. Cameron Clark, Mrs. David Bruce and others.

In the box of Lord and Lady Halifax were Field Marshal Sir John Dill, Lady Dill, Air Marshal John Evill and Mrs. Edwina d'Erlanger.

Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings were among the group entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies. Mrs. Byron, Representative from Marylnad, was also present.

General and Mrs. Louis Little entertained at a dinner preceding the concert. General and Mrs. Little, who have been entertaining Mrs. Little's sister, Mrs. Cornelius Bliss, Jr., of New York, left Wednesday to visit Mrs. Murray Cobb at Aiken. The Under Secretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis entertained Mrs. Bliss at several dinners while she was visiting General and Mrs. Little.

Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Ezequiel Padilla was entertained by the Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles at a stag dinner on Monday evening. A large reception was given for him on Wednesday afternoon at the Mexican Embassy by Ambasador and Senora de Najera.

Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was Dr. Padilla's dinner host on Thursday evening and the following night Mr. Nelson Rockefeller entertained in his honor. On Monday there will be a banquet for him at the Pan-American Building, to be given by the union. With Dr. Padilla are the Mexican Under Secretary of the Treasury, Senor Raymond Beteta; Senor Luciano Wichers and Senor Marion Romero, his private secretary.

Commandant Thomas Halcomb, USMC, and Mrs. Halcomb have as their guest Mrs. William James Calhoun, of Peking, China. Commandant and Mrs. Halcomb recently entertained Mrs. Calhoun at a Chinese dinner party. The guests included Mrs. Alexander A. Vandergrift, wife of Major General Vandergrift, Colonel and Mrs. A. H. Turnage, Colonel and Mrs. William C. James and Colonel and Mrs. Ronald A. Boone.

Hon. David Bowes-Lyon, brother of the Queen of England, is the guest of Lord and Lady Halifax at the British Embassy this week end. He will leave shortly to visit his daughter, Miss Davina Bowes-Lyon, and his son, Mr. Simon Bowes-Lyon, who have been staying near Charlottesville, Va., with their grandmother, Mrs. H. H. Spender Clay.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
APR 5 1942

Mrs. Woodward Is Vice Chairman of Concert Committee

Mrs. Stanley Woodward was named vice chairman of the Washington Committee for the Philadelphia Orchestra at a meeting last week in the home of Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller,, chairman of the committee.

The group met to discuss plans for the orchestra's final concert of the season on Wednesday evening, April 15th, an event which also will mark the close of Washington's winter symphonic season.

The committee had previously prevailed upon Harl McDonald, manager of the orchestra and himself a musician of international authority, to add to the previously announced Bach - Beethoven-Brahms program in "The Three B's" cycle, his own "San Juan Capistrano" nocturnes which have not yet been heard in Constitutional Hall.

Mrs. Woodward, wife of the State Department official, previously has been on committees for the orchestra both here and in their home city, Philadelphia. She has served on committees for last year's inaugural gala, for the past week's Russian war benefit by the Boston Symphony and long has been a patron for the National Symphony. Since the fall she has been devoting much of her time to the American Women Volunteer Service.

Mrs. Miller's committee includes Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador; Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, celebrated in music circles as Frances Nash; Mrs. A. A. Berle, jr., wife of the Assistant Secretary of State; Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Mrs. William Crozier, Miss Laura Harlan and Mrs. William R. Castle.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 2 - 1942

Mme Litvinov's Musicale Draws Many Notables

Boston Symphony Quintette Features Embassy Function

If Maxim Litvinov, Soviet Russia's ambassador, is a great statesman, his wife is an equally gracious hostess. Yesterday morning she presided over her first musicale at the embassy when the Boston Symphony Orchestra quintette played for a gathering of official, diplomatic, and residential society.

Among the striking personalities in the audience was the orchestra's conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, who was evidently well pleased with the playing and program.

As the guests thronged up the wide staircase soon after 11 o'clock, Mme. Litvinov greeted them smilingly and asked them if they would like a cocktail—an invitation many accepted. Soon the Ambassador appeared with the famed conductor, but refused to be seated before he had "shooed" members of his staff from an adjoining room into the ballroom to hear the music.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wearing a gay green hat with an otherwise severely tailored costume, arrived with her debutante daughter, Nedenia, whose blue bonnet matched her eyes; Mrs. Jerome Hill, of Pittsburgh, who has been visiting her, and Mrs. Millard Tydings. Mrs. Edwin M. Watson and Mrs. Emory Scott Land, who had been Mrs. Davies, cochairmen for the eminently successful Russian Relief concert, appeared soon after, the former accompanied by Mrs. Stanley Woodward.

The wives of the Supreme Court Justices, headed by Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, had almost a perfect record of attendance. Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, sitting beside Mrs. Frank Walker, wife of the Postmaster General; Mrs. Stanley Reed, saying the gathering seemed like the continuance of the night before, when Ambassador and Mme. Litvinov had a supper party for Koussevitzky; Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, who took a chair next to the wife of the New Zealand Minister, Mrs. Walter Nash; Mrs. James F. Byrnes, looking pretty under her new grape-trimmed hat, and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt was stunning, all in black; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman sat just ahead of Mme. Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Minister, and the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban were evidently fascinated with the Shostakovitch composition.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 2 - 1942

LITVINOFF MUSICALE HONORS COMPOSER

Shostakovich Quintet Heard at Soviet Embassy in Washington

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, April 1 — The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Litvinoff gave a musicale this morning at the Embassy for the debut performance here of the Shostakovich quintet, opus 57, of the distinguished Russian composer, which won for him the Stalin prize of 100,000 rubles sixteen months ago.

Played for the first time at the Soviet music festival of Nov. 30, 1940, it was presented today by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who gave a benefit concert last night in Constitution Hall for the Russian War Relief Fund. It was received with rounds of applause by the guests.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of last night's program, of which the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich was a part, was a guest at this morning's musicale.

Among others present were the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban; Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Mrs. Owen Roberts, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Robert Jackson, and Mrs. James F. Byrnes of the Supreme Court circle, and Mme. Morgenstierne, wife of the Norwegian Minister.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
APR 2 - 1942

Soviet Embassy Recital Honors Koussevitzky

Modern Russian Piano, Chamber Music Played

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the Boston Symphony in Constitution Hall Tuesday night, was honored at the Soviet Embassy yesterday morning by a recital featuring modern Russian piano and chamber compositions.

Ambassador and Mrs. Litvinov invited a small group of diplomats and music lovers to hear the Tanglewood Quartet and Jesus Maria San Roma, Puerto Rican pianist of eminent in Boston's musical life, present the Shostakovich quintet. This is the work which won the composer the 100,000-rouble Stalin prize in 1940. Shostakovich donated this sum to war relief.

Gains With Understanding

To the American admirer of this gifted man's art, growing understanding seems to increase its value. As to its racial aspects his fellow countrymen are, of course, the only competent judges. But to alien ears, the music of Shostakovich seems to have added qualities of introspection to his country's cultural expression.

The work has power. It has deep poetry. It develops the defined states of feeling in logical sequence, seeming to condition its thematic elaboration by predetermined emotional requirements. Great beauty is unfolded by this process but rarely is it the beauty of mere sentiment. The quintet shares with the symphonies the excitements of broad contrasts and urgent movement.

It begins with a modern Russian version of the contrapuntal prelude and fugue, exploited for its adaptability to cumulative climaxes. Form is incidental in the art of Shostakovich, which owes its power to a quality of direct if rarely obvious melodic eloquence. Its technical elements are beautifully ordered and the joint utterance of strings and piano is intriguing for its own sake.

Performance Admirable

The performance was entirely admirable. The Tanglewood Players have wrought a sensitive ensemble that is especially rich in its command of widely varied sonorities. Mr. San Roma's piano was flawlessly adjusted to this dynamic scheme. He prefaced the performance of the quintet by presenting four piano preludes by Prokofieff and as many "Fleeting Visions" by Shostakovich. New, daring, witty, and highly imaginative, both these Russian modernists have enlarged the acoustic resources of the instrument.

After the brilliant novelty of San Roma's playing and the stimulating invention of the Soviet masters, it will be difficult to return at once to the tamer and more familiar beauties of the established repertoire.

The Shostakovich quintet was repeated last night in the Library of Congress, under auspices of the Coolidge Foundation, on which occasion the Dvorak quintet replaced Mr. San Roma's solos on the program.

TACOMA, WASH.
TIMES
APR 2 - 1942

After Many Years

Soviet Music in Constitutional Hall

May Have to Revise Kipling Dictum

Many Sided State's Rights Issue

BY E. T. SHORT

WHAT next in this fast moving ing world?

About two years ago we were having the jitters because the United States, via Seward peninsula, was separated from Russia only by the narrow Bering strait. That was before the break between Russia and Germany, and the commentators found much good material in exploiting the possibility of Russia slipping across the strait some dark night and establishing a base from which the axis powers might successfully attack the United States.

Then, on June 21, 1941, the Hitler forces attacked Russia. Almost overnight a potential enemy became an ally and we began supplying planes, bombs and other war materials so that the Soviet government could fight the axis.

If you think that was quite a flop, read this:

Tuesday night, in historic constitutional hall in Washington, D. C., owned by the D. A. R., from the platform of which there has come bitter denunciation of the communistic affiliations of the Soviet government, Serge Koussevitsky led the Boston symphony orchestra through a stirring performance of the Soviet national anthem, "The Internationale."

The occasion was a concert of all Russian music, a Russian benefit for which the services of the orchestra had been donated. The program opened with the American national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner." Standing as the 115-piece orchestra played with deep feeling and vigor were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and a White House party.

Scarcely had the last echoes of the American anthem died away when the orchestra crashed into the first strains of "The Internationale."

It may be that when Mr. Kipling wrote his "east is east and west is west," it looked as if the twain never would meet. Today it is a smart prophet who refuses to predict what strange things this war may do to us.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
APR 3 - 1942

Russian Music Featured by Bostonians

By GRENA BENNETT

Russian music dominated last evening's program presented by the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall. The Russian works consisted of Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 6, and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky evidently aiming to maintain the same horizon in his list, ended the program with Brahm's First Symphony.

In considering the Prokofieff work some music-lovers have gone far afield in their admiration while others insist upon discovering the fly in the ointment, affirming that it mocks its "classic" claim. Yet its delicate charm, the grace and beauty of its melodies; the frank humor that is incorporated into many of its pages have outranked in popularity all of that composer's previous achievements.

Even the most satiated of concert patrons confess without restriction that the "Classical" Symphony retains all of its refreshing appeal at each repetition and if the enthusiasm of last night's audience is evidence, that number was without doubt one of the most enjoyable of the concert.

This was not due entirely to the enchanting score and its excellent craftsmanship but also to the polished brisk and scintillating interpretation by the Boston Band.

Although of vast contrast to the Prokofieff number the Shostakovich Symphony brought a diverting reaction to the auditors.

Its polyphonic arrangement of melodies and the individuality that marks the harmonizations and rhythms are in themselves evocative of interest.

It is a difficult work to elucidate but seemed an easy conquest for last evening's performers.

The music of Brahms' C minor Symphony has seldom sounded so eloquent or has been disclosed in so glowing and masterly a manner.

The import of the superb pages was revealed as a rare blend of romanticism and reflective beauty invested with impetuous drive and emotional appeal.

The hall was completely filled and the generous applause that followed each number was a deserved tribute to the conductor and to the instrumentalists.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
APR 5 - 1942

Mrs. Woodward Is Vice Chairman of Concert Committee

Mrs. Stanley Woodward was named vice chairman of the Washington Committee for the Philadelphia Orchestra at a meeting last week in the home of Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller, chairman of the committee.

The group met to discuss plans for the orchestra's final concert of the season on Wednesday evening, April 15th, an event which also will mark the close of Washington's winter symphonic season.

The committee had previously prevailed upon Harl McDonald, manager of the orchestra and himself a musician of international authority, to add to the previously announced Bach - Beethoven-Brahms program in "The Three B's" cycle, his own "San Juan Capistrano" nocturnes which have not yet been heard in Constitutional Hall.

Mrs. Woodward, wife of the State Department official, previously has been on committees for the orchestra both here and in their home city, Philadelphia. She has served on committees for last year's inaugural gala, for the past week's Russian war benefit by the Boston Symphony and long has been a patron for the National Symphony. Since the fall she has been devoting much of her time to the American Women Volunteer Service.

Mrs. Miller's committee includes Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador; Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, celebrated in music circles as Frances Nash; Mrs. A. A. Berle, jr., wife of the Assistant Secretary of State; Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, Mrs. William Crozier, Miss Laura Harlan and Mrs. William R. Castle.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
APR 5 - 1942

Notables Attend Concert

WASHINGTON

Mrs. Roosevelt attended Serge Koussevitsky's Russian Relief Concert, which was held on Tuesday night at Constitution Hall, having in her box Mrs. Kermet Roosevelt, Mrs. Cameron Clark, Mrs. David Bruce and others.

In the box of Lord and Lady Halifax were Field Marshal Sir John Dill, Lady Dill, Air Marshal John Evill and Mrs. Edwina d'Erlanger.

Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings were among the group entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies. Mrs. Byron, Representative from Marylnad, was also present.

General and Mrs. Louis Little entertained at a dinner preceding the concert. General and Mrs. Little, who have been entertaining Mrs. Little's sister, Mrs. Cornelius Bliss, Jr., of New York, left Wednesday to visit Mrs. Murray Cobb at Aiken. The Under Secretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis entertained Mrs. Bliss at several dinners while she was visiting General and Mrs. Little.

Mexican Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Ezequiel Padilla was entertained by the Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles at a stag dinner on Monday evening. A large reception was given for him on Wednesday afternoon at the Mexican Embassy by Ambasador and Senora de Najera.

Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was Dr. Padilla's dinner host on Thursday evening and the following night Mr. Nelson Rockefeller entertained in his honor. On Monday there will be a banquet for him at the Pan-American Building, to be given by the union. With Dr. Padilla are the Mexican Under Secretary of the Treasury, Senor Raymond Beteta; Senor Luciano Wichers and Senor Marion Romero, his private secretary.

Commandant Thomas Halcomb, USMC, and Mrs. Halcomb have as their guest Mrs. William James Calhoun, of Peking, China. Commandant and Mrs. Halcomb recently entertained Mrs. Calhoun at a Chinese dinner party. The guests included Mrs. Alexander A. Vandergrift, wife of Major General Vandergrift, Colonel and Mrs. A. H. Turnage, Colonel and Mrs. William C. James and Colonel and Mrs. Ronald A. Boone.

Hon. David Bowes-Lyon, brother of the Queen of England, is the guest of Lord and Lady Halifax at the British Embassy this week end. He will leave shortly to visit his daughter, Miss Davina Bowes-Lyon, and his son, Mr. Simon Bowes-Lyon, who have been staying near Charlottesville, Va., with their grandmother, Mrs. H. H. Spender Clay.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
APR 13 1942

Revolution

Constitution Hall, owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, resounded last week with the strains of the "Internationale." While the Boston Symphony Orchestra thus opened its Russian War Relief Concert, an enormous scarlet flag emblazoned with a gold hammer and sickle stood out before the emblems of 26 allied nations. Three revolutions scented the evening air: the Russian, the American, and the one to come . . .

'Tis the final conflict
Let each stand in his place!
The International Soviet
Will be the Human Race!

PERRY, IOWA
DAILY CHIEF
OCALA, FLA.
STAR
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
VALDOSTA, GA.
TIMES
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR-JOURNAL
COLUMBUS, GA.
ENQUIRER
AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE
DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS
WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
DAILY CHIEF
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

APR 2 1942

Litvinoffs Smile at American Tribute to Russia

Russian Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff, his wife, and their American friends were all smiles during the intermission of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Constitution Hall at Washington for the benefit of Russian war relief. Left to right: Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former U. S. ambassador to Russia, and Ambassador Litvinoff. The fashionable audience of 4,000 cheered as the Red flag of Soviet Russia was brought on the stage, and stood at attention while the orchestra played The Internationale, Soviet national anthem, and the Star Spangled Banner.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

APR 4 - 1942

Great Interest Shown In Symphony Concert

Unusual advance interest has been displayed in the program to be presented Monday night by the New Haven Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall in the seventh concert of the current series. The orchestra is to have the honor of introducing for the first time on any concert platform a new composition by David Stanley Smith, former dean of the Yale School of Music and senior member of the orchestra's conducting staff. This is his "Requiem", a "poem for violin and orchestra," based upon the opening prayer of the famous Requiem Mass.

Composed in 1939, "Requiem" has not before been given a public performance because Mr. Smith preferred to wait for the right combination of circumstances. When Ruth Posselt, New England artist hailed by Serge Koussevitsky as "one of the greatest violinists of our time," was engaged as soloist for Monday evening's concert, Mr. Smith immediately suggested that she introduce his composition. Miss Posselt eagerly accepted the opportunity to add a distinguished contemporary work to her repertoire.

The conductor will be Hugo Kortschak. For the remainder of the program he has scheduled two movements from the "Coq d'Or" suite by Rimsky-Korsakov and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 4 - 1942

Long before Doctor Koussevitzky sent genteel shivers along the rafters of Constitution Hall by playing The Internationale, there were those among Bushnell patrons who considered the Boston Symphonic Orchestra a Left-Wing outfit.

This reputation for radicalism grew out of the Bostonians' leaning toward such advanced music as the Second Symphony ("Kormtchaia") of Arthur Vincent Lourie and the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich. Especially resented by ears aching for the Three-B Balm was the time Koussevitzky programmed Schuman's "Festival Overture" because it so happened that the composer was William instead of Robert.

This composition has been recorded for Victor by Hans Kindler and the National Symphony Orchestra. And one who has now heard it a good many times is perfectly willing to assure any doubters that "Festival Overture" can become quite an amiable household companion. There are many technical excellences that might go down as academic except for the fact that the whole composition has a tremendous vitality. The fugal section can be cited as an outstanding technical accomplishment but even this does not at any time become merely technical.

AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 18 1942

THE "INTERNATIONALE"

EDITOR: Under date of April 4, I wrote as follows to Mr. Serge Koussevitsky, Conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra: The remarkable gall which you have displayed in playing the Internationale before a distinguished audience in Washington, was certainly an insulting gesture toward the country of your adoption, the United States of America.

"We can understand that your sympathies would be with the land of your birth, Russia. All of us admire the brave fight the Russian people are putting up in defense of their country and many of us can admire Russian music. However the Internationale which is the song of the Third International, glorifies world revolution and the communizing of all the people of the world.

"We as Americans, cannot subscribe to the ideas of the Third International, their advocacy of violence and sabotage to accomplish their ends, nor can we tolerate their official song.

"If the Russian Government has also adopted this world revolutionary song as their own, it implies that the Soviet Government also favors the methods used by the Third International which is indeed a poor repayment for United States help, so generously being furnished.

"Why insult the American people who are appreciative of your musical talents and incidentally pay you well for it."

Philadelphia, Pa. CHARLES ELCOCK

ASBURY PARK, N. J.
PRESS

APR 5 1942

New Jerseyites In Washington

WASHINGTON, (AP)—Sen. and Mrs. William H. Smathers were dinner guests of Vice President and Mrs. Wallace, the party going afterward to a concert given by the Boston Symphony orchestra as a benefit for Russian relief work.

Other guests at the dinner included Charles Bruggmann, the Swiss minister, and Mrs. Bruggmann, the latter a sister of Vice President Wallace.

Mrs. Smathers wore an ice blue crepe gown, beaded with rhinestones and decorated with gold braid, gold slippers and a taffeta hat.

James H. R. Cromwell was a guest at a cocktail party given by George Henry Payne, federal communications commissioner, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Oswald K. Knauth of New York.

Carl Bjorling of Newark was an usher at the wedding of Miss Patricia Grace Steeves and Romaine Maurice Grant, which took place in the Takoma Park Adventist church in suburban Takoma Park, Md.

Miss Mary Louise Winterode, daughter of Dr. Robert Preston Winterode and the late Mrs. Winterode, of nearby Crownsville, Md., has chosen April 18 as the date for her marriage to Ensign Paul Taylor Condit, U. S. N. R., son of Dean and Mrs. Kenneth H. Condit of Princeton university. The ceremony will take place in the chapel of the Annapolis Naval academy.

Mrs. H. H. Price of Metuchen, was a guest at the wedding of Miss Beatrice Ann White and Lt. George A. Vradenburg, jr., in St. Mary's chapel of the Washington cathedral.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

APR 6 - 1942

Washington Waltz

Axis Propaganda Halts Shipping

BY HELEN LOMBARD

Special to Newark News.

WASHINGTON—No one would have believed, in the Springtime of the Nazi-Russian alliance, that the day would come, not three years later, when a Washington audience composed of Supreme Court justices and high officials would stand at attention while the correct Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Internationale" from a hastily borrowed score.

Public opinion has come a long way, and through devious paths, to the logical conclusion that the outcome of the war is more important than political prejudices. Diplomats who watched this little scene express amazement that the Capital which could do an ideological somersault for the purpose of winning a war would still be dallying politely with the vital problem of Axis sabotage in the U. S. A.

With calls for more tonnage coming from our Allies, it is disturbing to learn that between 120,000 and 150,000 tons of merchant shipping lie idle in American harbors because of the intensive propaganda of Axis agents.

Axis Changes Methods

When surplus war materials from the last war were finally wrested from the maze of red tape and isolationist obstructionism and ready to be sent to France and England early in 1940, the departure was delayed for weeks because of Axis and pacifist propaganda among longshoremen. Today with America at war loadings cannot be stopped so the Axis has changed its methods.

Yugoslav, Dutch and Greek ships are tied up at the docks because crews are being terrorized by enemy agents, many of whom enjoy the protective coloration of American citizenship.

Crews are told gruesome tales of what to expect from Nazi submarines when their ships are sunk. Others, who have families in Nazi-occupied countries, are threatened with reprisals for those at home if they set sail with cargoes for Allied ports.

Frequent sinkings of American and Allied merchantmen give color enough to the tales of terror which these agents are spreading. The mounting toll of Allied shipping plus the intensive enemy activity in American ports are making an acute situation dramatic.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 5 - 1942

[16T]

Inside In Washington

By Elisabeth May Craig

Special Despatch to Sunday Telegram

Washington, April 4—Easter, and Spring is here. In Washington the forsythia is yellow and the magolias cream-white in the parks. Around the Basin the Japanese cherry trees are putting out early blooms. You can hear over the Tokyo radio that the trees have all been chopped down. One was chopped down, secretly, by some fanatic, but there are hundreds left, and the chopping was an isolated instance.

This year the trees are more beaut ful perhaps, because there is no commercial "festival," such as marred previous years with peanut venders, bands, lines of automobiles sending out smoke, the circus that was made of the beauty of the trees.

There are few tourists this year, compared to other years. The President has asked that only those with business come to the city. Most conventions have been diverted elsewhere—the DAR has gone to Chicago, first time in my professional life, I think, that they have not met here. Very few high school groups have come for their usual annual spring visit. The city is jammed with war workers, community facilities are strained to the utmost with war work, even the telephone system can hardly bear an unnecessary call.

And back in the minds of officials, Federal and municipal, is always the dread of an air raid here, with a lot of visitors milling around and frantic home-folks trying to find out what happened to them.

IN Constitution Hall the Internationale, the Russian national anthem, was played at the brilliant Russian Relief concert, by the Boston Symphony. Everybody was there, official and diplomatic and social. To the observer on the sidelines, remembering our attitude toward Russia such a short year ago, this makes for tolerance. Viewing the changing friendships and hatreds as the world goes by, gives one a sense of proportion and relation, slightly tinged with amusement at current dithers.

Don't forget that Constitution Hall belongs to the Daughters of the American Revolution. Reporters in the press box irrepressibly nudged each other as the Internationale rang out in those precincts. Communist Russia has been one of the pet hates of the DAR. And they reserved their right to rent their beautiful hall to anybody they pleased—they refused the United Mine Workers once, when the CIO was new and accused of Communism and all the sins in the respectable decalogue.

The war makes a lot of small differences. Stores stay open every Thursday. For years we have had the anomaly of a city filled with women working in government departments, who never had more than a quarter to a half hour to shop because the stores closed so early. I remember arguments I had with storekeepers about night openings. They were dead in tradition. It was of no avail to say that stores should be open at the time the bulk of their customers could shop.

For several weeks now by agreement the stores have opened at noon and stayed open late on Thursday. They have been swamped, looked like Christmas. Some even want to stay open another regular evening a week. Government employes are revelling in being able to shop in a leisurely manner.

There is not going to be any party for the press at the White House this year. Each Spring there has been this party for the press, just the honeysuckles and magnolias were in bloom in the South Gardens. Also eliminated is the traditional Easter egg rolling in the Gardens. In a thousand ways the war is changing our free and easy American way of living.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

APR 1 1942

THE LYONS DEN

BENEFIT: Martin Gabel, the producer, now is recovering from the shock he suffered last week when he was master of ceremonies at the Russian War Relief concert given in Washington—Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra were the principal attraction at this show whose patrons witnessed a series and amazing and incongruous events. "I first felt the shock," Gabel confessed, "when, for Soviet Relief, I saw Cissy Patterson and Lord Halifax rise to attention, when the Internationale was played, in the D. A. R. Hall, by a non-union orchestra, conducted by a former White Russian, who wore a mink-lined coat."

PERRY, IOWA
DAILY CHIEF

OCALA, FLA.
STAR

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

VALDOSTA, GA.
TIMES

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
STAR-JOURNAL

COLUMBUS, GA.
ENQUIRER

AUGUSTA, GA.
CHRONICLE

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
EVENING NEWS

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
DAILY CHIEF

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

APR 2 1942

AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 18 1942

THE "INTERNATIONALE"

EDITOR: Under date of April 4, I wrote as follows to Mr. Serge Koussevitsky, Conductor, Boston Symphony Orchestra: The remarkable gall which you have displayed in playing the Internationale before a distinguished audience in Washington, was certainly an insulting gesture toward the country of your adoption, the United States of America.

"We can understand that your sympathies would be with the land of your birth, Russia. All of us admire the brave fight the Russian people are putting up in defense of their country and many of us can admire Russian music. However the Internationale which is the song of the Third International, glorifies world revolution and the communizing of all the people of the world.

"We as Americans, cannot subscribe to the ideas of the Third International, their advocacy of violence and sabotage to accomplish their ends, nor can we tolerate their official song.

"If the Russian Government has also adopted this world revolutionary song as their own, it implies that the Soviet Government also favors the methods used by the Third International which is indeed a poor repayment for United States help, so generously being furnished.

"Why insult the American people who are appreciative of your musical talents and incidentally pay you well for it."

Philadelphia, Pa. CHARLES ELCOCK

Litvinoffs Smile at American Tribute to Russia

Russian Ambassador Maxim Litvinoff, his wife, and their American friends were all smiles during the intermission of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Constitution Hall at Washington for the benefit of Russian war relief. Left to right: Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky, Madame Litvinoff, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former U. S. ambassador to Russia, and Ambassador Litvinoff. The fashionable audience of 4,000 cheered as the Red flag of Soviet Russia was brought on the stage, and stood at attention while the orchestra played The Internationale, Soviet national anthem, and the Star Spangled Banner.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

APR 4 - 1942

Great Interest Shown In Symphony Concert

Unusual advance interest has been displayed in the program to be presented Monday night by the New Haven Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall in the seventh concert of the current series. The orchestra is to have the honor of introducing for the first time on any concert platform a new composition by David Stanley Smith, former dean of the Yale School of Music and senior member of the orchestra's conducting staff. This is his "Requiem", a "poem for violin and orchestra," based upon the opening prayer of the famous Requiem Mass.

Composed in 1939, "Requiem" has not before been given a public performance because Mr. Smith preferred to wait for the right combination of circumstances. When Ruth Posselt, New England artist hailed by Serge Koussevitsky as "one of the greatest violinists of our time," was engaged as soloist for Monday evening's concert, Mr. Smith immediately suggested that she introduce his composition. Miss Posselt eagerly accepted the opportunity to add a distinguished contemporary work to her repertoire.

The conductor will be Hugo Kortschak. For the remainder of the program he has scheduled two movements from the "Coq d'Or" suite by Rimsky-Korsakov and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 4 - 1942

Long before Doctor Koussevitsky sent genteel shivers along the rafters of Constitution Hall by playing The Internationale, there were those among Bushnell patrons who considered the Boston Symphonic Orchestra a Left-Wing outfit.

This reputation for radicalism grew out of the Bostonians' leaning toward such advanced music as the Second Symphony ("Kormtchaia") of Arthur Vincent Lourie and the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich. Especially resented by ears aching for the Three-B Balm was the time Koussevitsky programmed Schuman's "Festival Overture" because it so happened that the composer was William instead of Robert.

This composition has been recorded for Victor by Hans Kindler and the National Symphony Orchestra. And one who has now heard it a good many times is perfectly willing to assure any doubters that "Festival Overture" can become quite an amiable household companion. There are many technical excellences that might go down as academic except for the fact that the whole composition has a tremendous vitality. The fugal section can be cited as an outstanding technical accomplishment but even this does not at any time become merely technical.

ASBURY PARK, N. J.
PRESS

APR 5 - 1942

New Jerseyites In Washington

WASHINGTON. (AP)—Sen. and Mrs. William H. Smathers were dinner guests of Vice President and Mrs. Wallace, the party going afterward to a concert given by the Boston Symphony orchestra as a benefit for Russian relief work.

Other guests at the dinner included Charles Bruggmann, the Swiss minister, and Mrs. Bruggmann, the latter a sister of Vice President Wallace.

Mrs. Smathers wore an ice blue crepe gown, beaded with rhinestones and decorated with gold braid, gold slippers and a taffeta hat.

James H. R. Cromwell was a guest at a cocktail party given by George Henry Payne, federal communications commissioner, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Oswald K. Knauth of New York.

Carl Bjorling of Newark was an usher at the wedding of Miss Patricia Grace Steeves and Romaine Maurice Grant, which took place in the Takoma Park Adventist church in suburban Takoma Park, Md.

Miss Mary Louise Winterode, daughter of Dr. Robert Preston Winterode and the late Mrs. Winterode, of nearby Crownsville, Md., has chosen April 18 as the date for her marriage to Ensign Paul Taylor Condit, U. S. N. R., son of Dean and Mrs. Kenneth H. Condit of Princeton university. The ceremony will take place in the chapel of the Annapolis Naval academy.

Mrs. H. H. Price of Metuchen, was a guest at the wedding of Miss Beatrice Ann White and Lt. George A. Vradenburg, jr., in St. Mary's chapel of the Washington cathedral.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

APR 6 - 1942

Washington Waltz

Axis Propaganda Halts Shipping

BY HELEN LOMBARD

Special to Newark News.

WASHINGTON—No one would have believed, in the Springtime of the Nazi-Russian alliance, that the day would come, not three years later, when a Washington audience composed of Supreme Court justices and high officials would stand at attention while the correct Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Internationale" from a hastily borrowed score.

Public opinion has come a long way, and through devious paths, to the logical conclusion that the outcome of the war is more important than political prejudices. Diplomats who watched this little scene express amazement that the Capital which could do an ideological somersault for the purpose of winning a war would still be dallying politely with the vital problem of Axis sabotage in the U. S. A.

With calls for more tonnage coming from our Allies, it is disturbing to learn that between 120,000 and 150,000 tons of merchant shipping lie idle in American harbors because of the intensive propaganda of Axis agents.

Axis Changes Methods

When surplus war materials from the last war were finally wrested from the maze of red tape and isolationist obstructionism and ready to be sent to France and England early in 1940, the departure was delayed for weeks because of Axis and pacifist propaganda among longshoremen. Today with America at war loadings cannot be stopped so the Axis has changed its methods.

Yugoslav, Dutch and Greek ships are tied up at the docks because crews are being terrorized by enemy agents, many of whom enjoy the protective coloration of American citizenship.

Crews are told gruesome tales of what to expect from Nazi submarines when their ships are sunk. Others, who have families in Nazi-occupied countries, are threatened with reprisals for those at home if they set sail with cargoes for Allied ports.

Frequent sinkings of American and Allied merchantmen give color enough to the tales of terror which these agents are spreading. The mounting toll of Allied shipping plus the intensive enemy activity in American ports are making an acute situation dramatic.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 5 - 1942

[165]

Inside In Washington

By Elisabeth May Craig

Special Despatch to Sunday Telegram

Washington, April 4—Easter, and Spring is here. In Washington the forsythia is yellow and the magolias cream-white in the parks. Around the Basin the Japanese cherry trees are putting out early blooms. You can hear over the Tokyo radio that the trees have all been chopped down. One was chopped down, secretly, by some fanatic, but there are hundreds left, and the chopping was an isolated instance.

This year the trees are more beautiful perhaps, because there is no commercial "festival," such as marred previous years with peanut venders, bands, lines of automobiles sending out smoke, the circus that was made of the beauty of the trees.

There are few tourists this year, compared to other years. The President has asked that only those with business come to the city. Most conventions have been diverted elsewhere—the DAR has gone to Chicago, first time in my professional life, I think, that they have not met here. Very few high school groups have come for their usual annual spring visit. The city is jammed with war workers, community facilities are strained to the utmost with war work, even the telephone system can hardly bear an unnecessary call.

And back in the minds of officials, Federal and municipal, is always the dread of an air raid here, with a lot of visitors milling around and frantic home-folks trying to find out what happened to them.

IN Constitution Hall the Internationale, the Russian national anthem, was played at the brilliant Russian Relief concert, by the Boston Symphony. Everybody was there, official and diplomatic and social. To the observer on the sidelines, remembering our attitude toward Russia such a short year ago, this makes for tolerance. Viewing the changing friendships and hatreds as the world goes by, gives one a sense of proportion and relation, slightly tinged with amusement at current dithers.

Don't forget that Constitution Hall belongs to the Daughters of the American Revolution. Reporters in the press box irrepressibly nudged each other as the Internationale rang out in those precincts. Communist Russia has been one of the pet hates of the DAR. And they reserved their right to rent their beautiful hall to anybody they pleased—they refused the United Mine Workers once, when the CIO was new and accused of Communism and all the sins in the respectable decalogue.

The war makes a lot of small differences. Stores stay open every Thursday. For years we have had the anomaly of a city filled with women working in government departments, who never had more than a quarter to a half hour to shop because the stores closed so early. I remember arguments I had with storekeepers about night openings. They were dead in tradition. It was of no avail to say that stores should be open at the time the bulk of their customers could shop.

For several weeks now by agreement the stores have opened at noon and stayed open late on Thursday. They have been swamped, looked like Christmas. Some even want to stay open another regular evening a week. Government employes are revelling in being able to shop in a leisurely manner.

There is not going to be any party for the press at the White House this year. Each Spring there has been this party for the press, just the honeysuckles and magnolias were in bloom in the South Gardens. Also eliminated is the traditional Easter egg rolling in the Gardens. In a thousand ways the war is changing our free and easy American way of living.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD

APR 10 1942

THE LYONS DEN

BENEFIT: Martin Gabel, the producer, now is recovering from the shock he suffered last week when he was master of ceremonies at the Russian War Relief concert given in Washington—Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra were the principal attraction at this show whose patrons witnessed a series and amazing and incongruous events. "I first felt the shock," Gabel confessed, "when, for Soviet Relief, I saw Cissy Patterson and Lord Halifax rise to attention, when the Internationale was played, in the D. A. R. Hall, by a non-union orchestra, conducted by a former White Russian, who wore a mink-lined coat."

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS

APR 7-1942

[166]

We Need Thinking and Realism In Dealing With Communism

AMERICANS, like the people of other nations need most of all sound and considered reasons for what they do and "think they think."

Louis J. Schaefle, Washington correspondent recently wrote the following from this nation's capital:

Recently, the great Boston Symphony Orchestra played one of its rare concerts in Washington. The scene was Constitution hall, owned by the Red-hating Daughters of the American Revolution. The famed Serge Koussevitzky waved his baton and a mighty surge came from his artists. It was the Internationale, the marching song of Communism.

The audience, bigwigs and all, rose to its collective feet just as crowds do when our own national anthem is played. Standing at rigid attention were Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt and Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone.

Everyone knows that two years ago, even one year ago, such an action by a Washington audience in Constitution hall would have been impossible, and unthinkable. Yet, in two years, Communism as a form of government has not changed; and—we hope—the American form of government has not changed. Of course, Communists have done a number of things recently that anti-Communists did not expect. But, that does not change Communism as a government and it does not change the objectives of the Internationale or the endorsement and honor of those objectives supposed to be signified by standing when the Internationale is played.

The fact is that much of the hatred for Communism, as Communism, in the past has not been founded 'i knowledge and reasoning. The fact is, also that the new attitude toward Communism has no real foundation in reason and is not based upon adequate information.

It is tremendously important that the attitude of Americans toward Russia and Communism be based upon facts and sound thinking. When the American victory is won, Russia's part in that victory promises to have been so large that Russia must be a powerful factor in the world's post war affairs. In that event the American people—not merely American officials—should be in a position to be realists about the whole Russian and Communist situation.

People who make "Communist" a synonym for their most uncomplimentary epithets one year and then stand for the playing of the Internationale in Con itution hall next year are not looking at Communism or Russia with reason, knowledge and realism.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA.
DOMINION NEWS
NEW ULM, MINN.
JOURNAL
DEAD WOOD, S. D.
PIONEER TIMES

APR 7 - 1942

Two Years Ago—And Now.

If anyone two years ago said this would happen in 1942, anxious friends would send out a hurry call for the nearest psychiatrist and the latest model strait jacket. Then Russia was smashing its way into Finland, losing tens of thousands of men on the way and this country was boiling mad over the attack. The little Scandinavian republic had won our hearts because of its democracy and insistence, alone among all nations on earth, in paying back what taxpayers here had loaned it in an hour of trouble.

Recently, the Boston Symphony orchestra played one of its rare concerts in Washington. The scene was Constitution Hall, owned by the Red-hating Daughters of the American Revolution. The famed Serge Koussevitzky waved his baton and a mighty surge came from his artists. It was the Internationale, the marching song of Communism.

The audience, bigwigs and all, rose to its collective feet just as crowds do when our own national anthem is played. Standing at rigid attention were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone. Conspicuously missing from the building was Finnish Minister Hjalmer Procope, the idol of Washington a few brief months ago, when he was the most wined, dined, danced and sought after individual for miles around.

PASSAIC, N. J.
HERALD-NEWS

APR 8 - 942

Criticism of Chairman Dies

DESPITE THE FACT that great pressure is brought annually to discontinue the Dies Committee, it seems Congress always votes to keep it active.

Again this year we have seen this group, whose duty is to uncover subversive elements in our midst, continued by an overwhelming vote. True, funds for its operation have not yet been appropriated, and we foresee the usual opposition doing all in its power to see that the money is not forthcoming.

Why is there such a vigorous resistance to continuing this Committee when its sole purpose is to bring to light persons and situations that would work against American principles, giving aid to our enemies, and thus hamper prosecution of the war?

The answer is obvious, namely, that so frequently this Committee has unearthed subversive elements in places where, above all, they certainly should not exist.

And where are those places? Again the answer can be given by anybody who loves the truth,—in departments of our very Government.

Nobody kicks when these festering spots are found here or there in private places, but when the finger of accusation or suspicion reveals them in high councils it gets under the skin and bitter denunciation of the Committee is heard as the darts hit home.

The latest to boil over with wrath is our Vice-President, Henry A. Wallace. Although his Committee is praised by Congress repeatedly and continued in office on account of the good work it has done, and it is supported by good percentages in its favor in Gallup polls, Martin Dies has now been likened by the Vice-President to Goebbels of infamous fame across the sea.

What has Dies done to cause Mr. Wallace to get into such a tantrum? He simply pointed out that some of the men on Mr. Wallace's Board of Economic Warfare had previously been connected with organizations that had such a Communistic flavor that the taste was bad to all of us who prefer a more genuine Americanism. Mr. Dies could have gone further and said Mr. Wallace himself once wrote a book that was widely held to be all too friendly to certain Communistic principles. This Mr. Dies refrained from doing. He knows Mr. Wallace couldn't, and shouldn't, be expunged from public office just for that, but his suggestion that the others be replaced was what threw our Vice-President into a temper and caused him to call names not suitable in one of his exalted position.

We value the Russians as comrades-in-arms, battling valiantly for liberty, helping heroically to make possible our own victory, together with that of all the United Nations. We have no desire to offend them. When Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony in the Internationale, marching song of Communism, the great audience in the D. A. R.'s Constitution Hall honored it as they would our own National Anthem, and the Country liked the gesture.

We even wish the Russians well in their experiments with the ideals of Marx and Lenin—experiments which, by the way, have led to profound changes, and will lead to more.

But we don't want Communism here, and we have grave doubts whether American Communists are qualified to lead us to victory, to real peace, or to a better America.

At any rate, it should be easy to determine the facts. If they ar is Mr. Dies says they are, "exit" should be de reed for all the officials he has in mind.

Why not?

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

APR 8 - 1942

By Helen Lombard

Washington Waltz

WASHINGTON, April 8.—No one would have believed, in the springtime of the Nazi-Russian alliance, that the day would come, not three years later, when a Washington audience composed of Supreme Court justices and high officials would stand at attention while the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the "Internationale" from a hastily borrowed score.

Public opinion has come a long way, and through devious paths, to the logical conclusion that the outcome of the war is more important than political prejudices. Diplomats of the United Nations, who watched this little scene with gratified surprise, express amazement that the capital which could do an ideological somersault for the purpose of winning a war would still be dallying politely with the vital problem of Axis sabotage in the United States.

With calls for tonnage and more tonnage coming from every one of our allies and all our fronts, it is disturbing to learn that between 120,000 and 150,000 tons of merchant shipping are lying idle in American harbors because of the intensive propaganda of Axis agents. Many of these men have been operating for years and are known on every water front.

When surplus war materials from the last war were finally wrested from the maze of red tape and isolationist obstructionism and ready to be sent to warring France and England early in 1940, the departure was delayed for weeks because of Axis and pacifist propaganda among [illegible]men. Today, with America at war, loadings cannot be stopped so the Axis has changed its methods.

Yugoslav, Dutch and Greek ships are tied up at the docks because crews are being terrorized by enemy agents, many of whom enjoy the protective coloration of American citizenship.

Crews are told gruesome tales of what to expect from commanders of Nazi submarines when their ships are sunk. Others, who have families in Nazi-occupied countries, are threatened with dire reprisals for those at home if they set sail with cargoes for Allied ports. Axis agents even produce pleading letters from the families of the foreign sailors, begging the men not to make life harder under the Nazis than it already is.

Frequent sinkings of American and Allied merchantmen give color enough to the tales of terror which these agents are spreading. The mounting toll of Allied shipping plus the intensive enemy activity in American ports are making an acute situation dramatic.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

APR 1 - 1942

[167]

Times-Herald Photo by James McNamara

Among the Notables Attending Concert to Aid Russian Relief

Soviet Ambassador Maxim Litvinov, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, Mrs. Litvinov, and Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Russia (left to right), are pictured shortly after arriving at Constitution Hall last night to attend the Boston Symphony concert led by noted Conductor Serge Koussevitzky. The concert was given for benefit of Russian relief.

Notables Attend Soviet Benefit; 'Internationale' Draws Cheers

By FRASER EDWARDS

In the sacred precincts of Constitution Hall, where the Daughters of the American Revolution have denounced the Red Bolshevist menace for many years, the rousing strains of the "Internationale" rang out last night at the Russian Relief benefit concert played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sponsored by President Roosevelt, the event was attended by Mrs. Roosevelt, the Ambassador of the Soviet Union, Maxim Litvinov, and Mrs. Litvinov, Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Russia, and Mrs. Davies, and virtually all the outstanding personages in Washington.

Hear Plea by Barkley

During the intermission, the brilliant assemblage heard a stirring plea for aid to Russia, delivered by Senator Alben W. Barkley, Administration leader of the Senate. Russia is asking only for arms to fight the Nazi invaders, Barkley declared, in explaining the proceeds of the concert would go as an American gift to 1,500,000 wounded Russian soldiers and to the 60,000,000 homeless in the invaded Soviet territory.

Barkley said Russia needed medical supplies to heal the wounded, and expected to send about 80 per cent of them back to the battle lines.

Every one of the 3,800 seats in Constitution Hall was filled, and standing room was at a premium. The corridors outside of the hall were jammed, and the concert was delayed for 15 minutes before the milling crowd became quiet.

It seemed that the staid Boston Symphony Orchestra never has been called upon to render the "Internationale" and, therefore, had no orchestration of the Russian national anthem. It was necessary to call on Aaron Copeland, of New York, an American composer, to supply this lack, but the famed musical organization gave it gusto.

Marine Units on Hand

The occasion was given a military setting by the United States Marine Drum and Bugle Corps, which led the procession of Marine Corps color bearers, which presented the flags of the 26 United Nations in the war against Nazi Germany and her Axis partners, Italy and Japan.

The Boston Orchestra stood throughout the colorful preliminaries, but with the entrance of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, it struck up the stirring strains of the "Internationale," which was followed by the American National Anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner."

When the applause which greeted both airs died away, the concert began.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.
NEWS

APR 10 1942

DAR Guest Speaker To Be SAR Officer Irving Edgar Chase

Irving Edgar Chase, vice-president of the New York Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, and secretary of the New York Society, Order of Founders and Patriots of America, will be the speaker for the annual evening program, Tuesday night, of the Tarrytown Chapter, DAR.

Mr. Chase, who addressed the group several years ago, will speak at the home of Mrs. Charles T. Newberry, Sunnyside Lane. The program, which will start at 8:15 o'clock, will also include a group of numbers by pianist, Fay Ferguson (Mrs. J. Maynard Williamson of Scarborough). Miss Ferguson, who was a soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra at the age of nine, was graduated from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and studied in London with Tobias Mathay and Harold Samuels, Bach specialist. She toured abroad and played for BBC in London. In the United States she has given seven Town Hall recitals, and been a soloist with the Philadelphia, Detroit, Boston Symphony Orchestras, on the Metropolitan Sunday Evening Concerts under Pelletier, and is now with the National Broadcasting Company.

Assisting Mrs. Newberry will be Miss Mollie Newberry, Mrs. A. P. Cobb and Mrs. Clarence E. Bacon.

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL

APR 7 - 1942

How Our Enthusiasms Change

This year the Daughters of the American Revolution will not hold their annual national convention in Constitution hall, Washington. The vast auditorium, which the Daughters builded with so much interest and sacrifice, has been taken from them for the duration. They lose their hall for the same reason that the men folks lose their second pair of trousers to one suit. As the French used to be quoted as saying "C'est la guerre." Yes, it is the war.

But to the credit of the Daughters, the Lansing members included, they are not sobbing over the fact that their national meeting is to be in Chicago. Indeed, the central west will be represented as never before. Heretofore, at the Washington conventions, New York and Pennsylvania have had the convention largely to themselves.

The matter of the D. A. R. convention being set this year for Chicago in May would not have shared attention in this paper with the social page were it not that the present set-up leads on to a bit of a grin for which the Daughters are not in the least responsible.

If anyone two years ago had said the circumstances about to be related would happen in 1942 he would have been pityingly regarded as "teched" in the head." Two years ago Russia was smashing its way into Finland, losing tens of thousands of men on the way and this country was boiling mad over the attack. The little Scandinavian republic had won our hearts because of its democracy and insistence, alone among all nations on earth, in paying back what taxpayers here had loaned it in an hour of trouble.

Recently, the great Boston Symphony orchestra played one of its rare concerts in Washington. The scene was Constitution hall, owned by the Red-hating Daughters of the American Revolution. The famed Serge Koussevitzky waved his baton and a mighty surge came from his artists. It was the Internationale, the marching song of Communism.

The audience, bigwigs and all, rose to its collective feet just as crowds do when our own national anthem is played. Standing at rigid attention were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone. Conspicuously missing from the building was Finnish Minister Hjalmar Procope, the idol of Washington a few brief months ago, when he was the most wined, dined, danced and sought-after individual for miles around.

What the Daughters think of the Internationale being played in their sacred shrine has not yet been stated in resolutions. One of our English poets once remarked something to the effect that manners change with fortunes while humor turns with the weather.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

APR 7 - 1942

Russian War Relief Benefit Here This Saturday Evening

Local Committee Sets Quota of Five Large Field Hospital Tents as Its Share in Campaign

The campaign to raise $6,000,000 for Russian war relief is meeting with excellent success according to word received today by the Northampton Committee for Russian War Relief, Inc., in New York.

Notable figures throughout the country are actively supporting the campaign. A gala benefit concert sponsored by leading public figures was given in Washington, D. C., on March 31 by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The entire proceeds went for medical aid for the Russian front. Mr. Koussevitzky is honorary chairman of the Massachusetts Committee of Russian War Relief. A committee has just been established to campaign for funds in Albany, N. Y., with Gov. Herbert H. Lehman as chairman. New York City is launching an intensive "spring offensive" campaign, opening with a city-wide conference presided over by Bishop Francis J. O'Connell.One feature of the campaign will be a luncheon given by the women's division of Russian War Relief in honor of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Madam Ivy Litvinoff, wife of the Soviet ambassador to the United States.

Former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York has recently joined the board of directors of the national organization. Mr. Smith said in his statement, "On this board I join some of America's most eminent leaders and I intend to take an active part, with them, in work for Russian relief. No American can fail to recognize that aid in all forms for our allies is the quickest and cheapest means available of striking at Hitler. The Russian army and people are serving magnificently as the spearhead of our fight and I have joined the board of directors of Russian War Relief, Inc., in order to do what I can to aid them."

The Northampton committee has set a quota of five large field hospital tents as its share in the current campaign for Russian war relief. Sufficient funds for two tents measuring 16 by 50 feet each have already been raised locally since January, together with funds for anaesthetics, anaesthe. masks, surgical instruments, sterilizers, and other equipment for emergency field operations.

Funds have been raised chiefly by benefits and contributions. But also ingenious methods have been used by sponsors of the local committee. The pupils of the Northampton School for Girls raised $27.50 for Russian war relief recently by a "golden rule

BLANK PAGE

Shipman's Scrap Book FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBERS
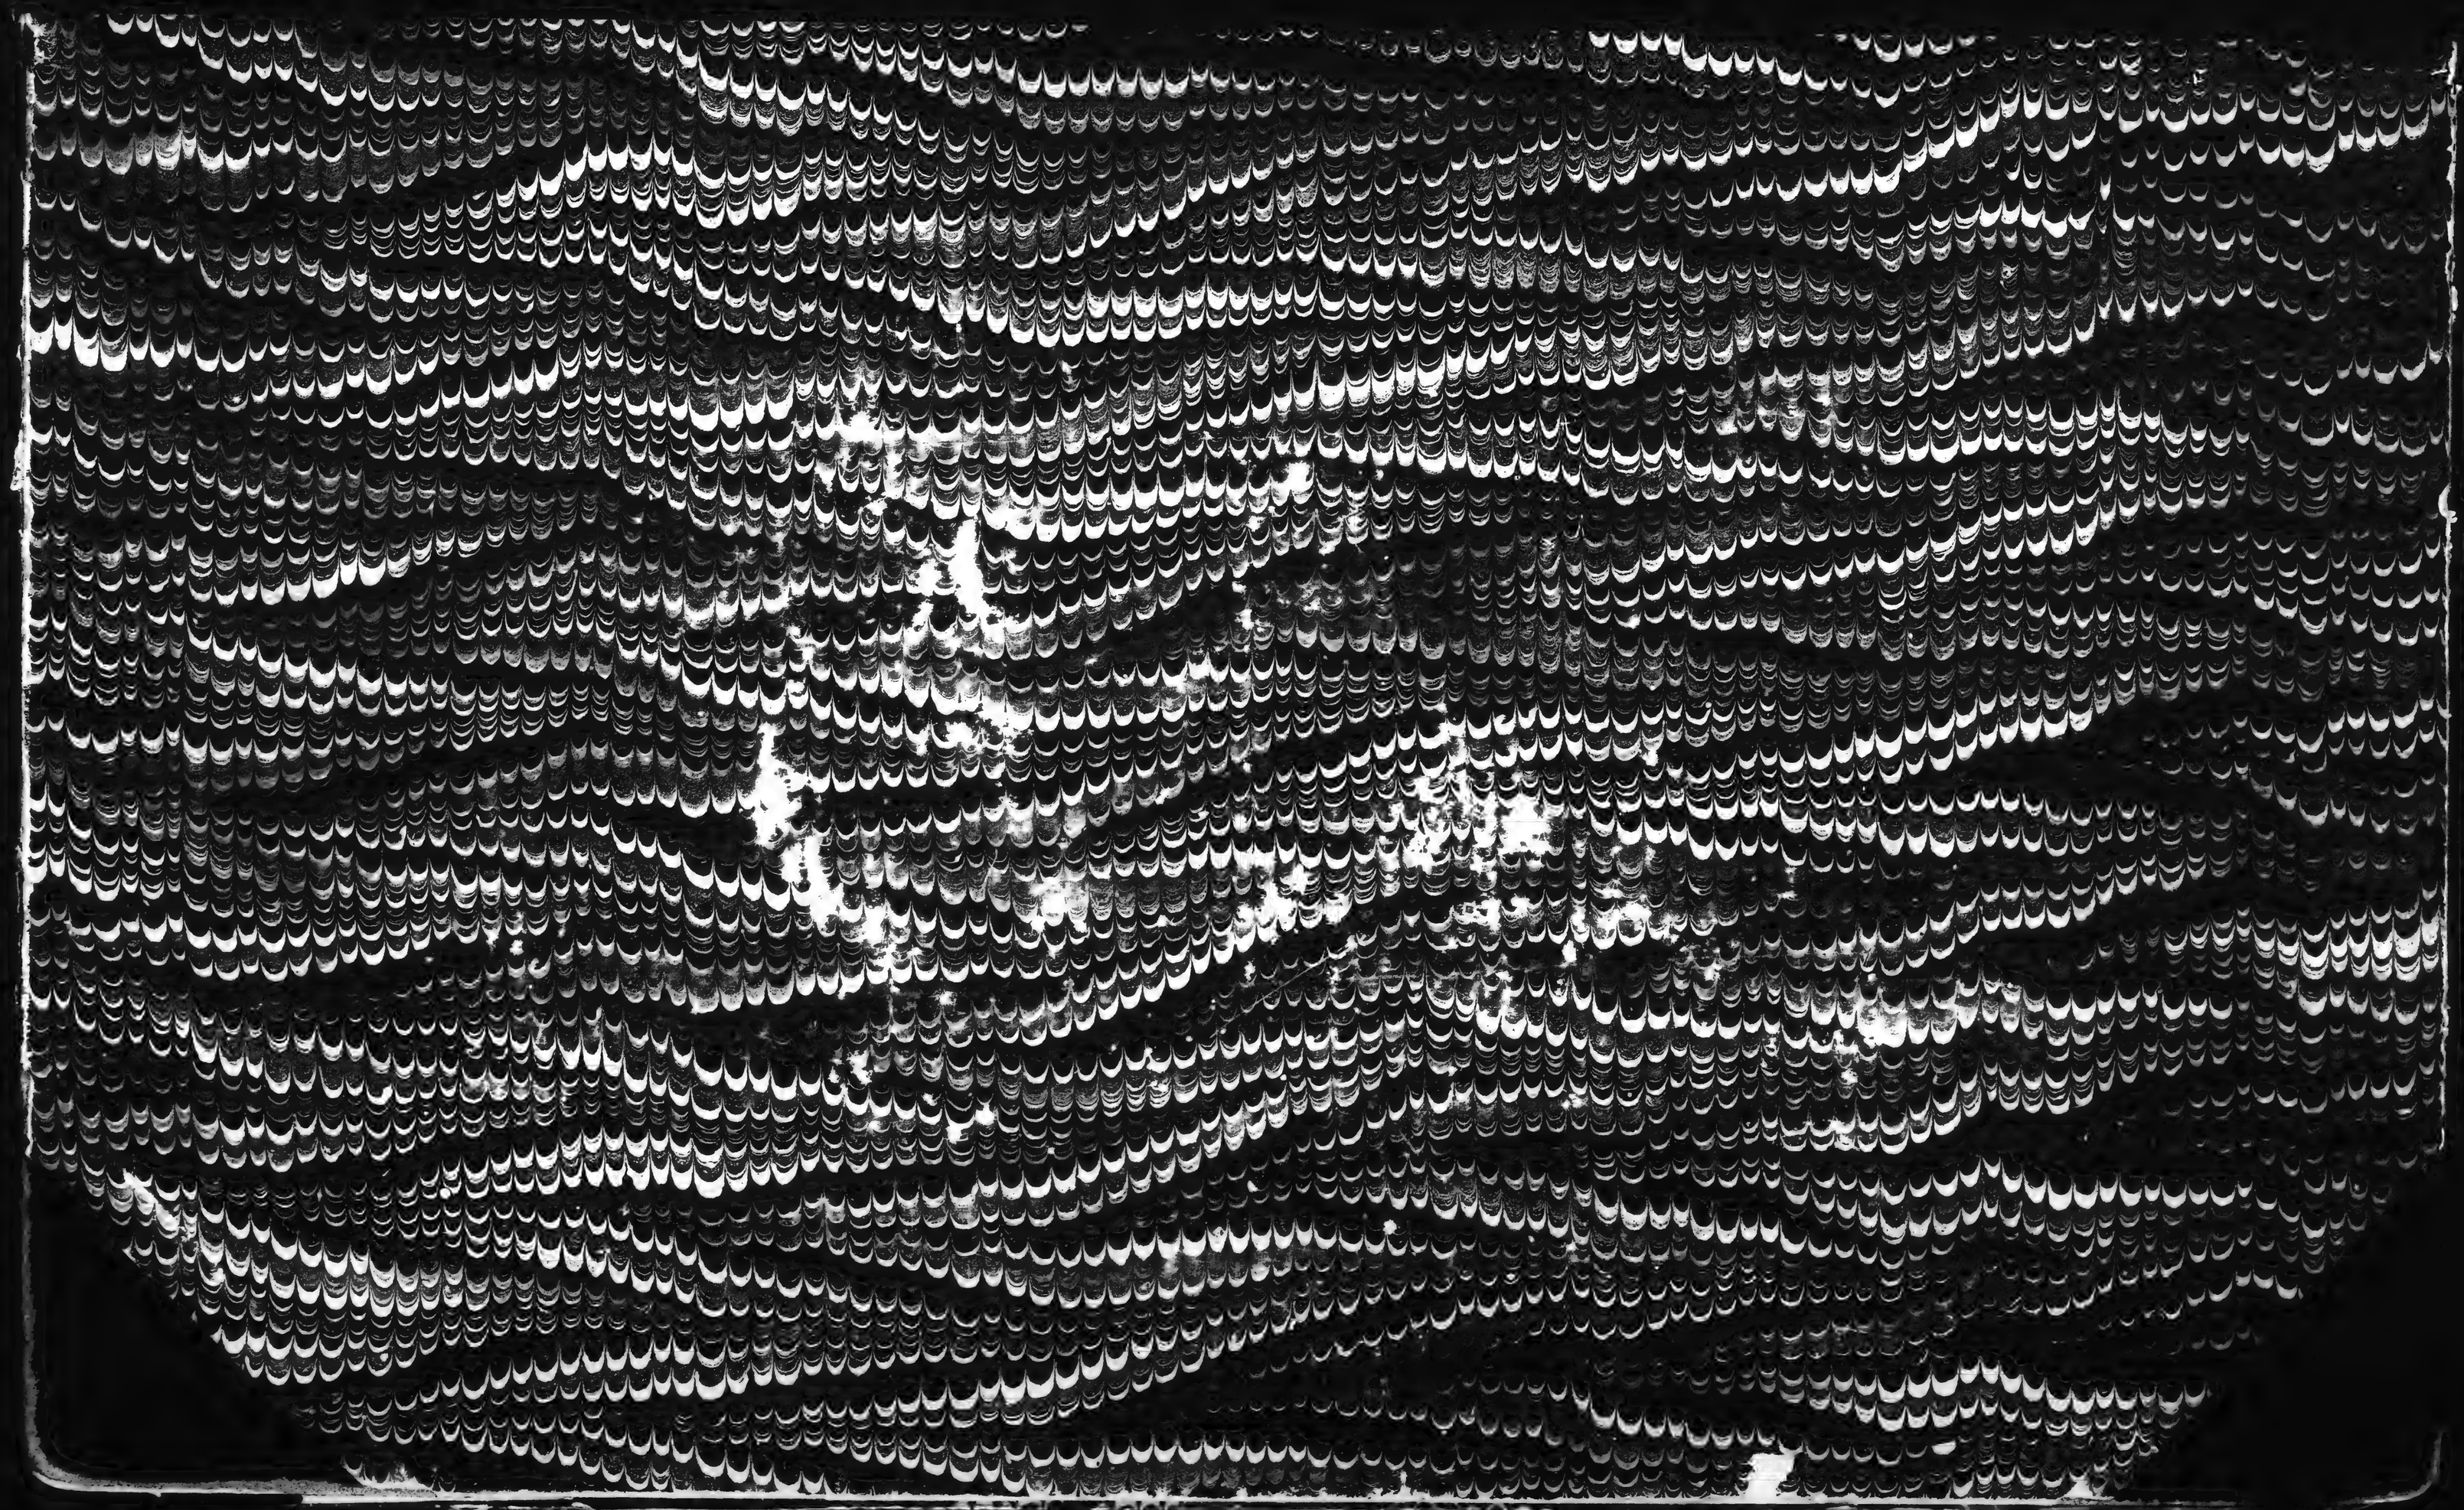
911
ASA C. SONS
Ward's STATIONERS
57-61 FRANKLIN ST.
BOSTON



END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 72

BSO

1942 - 1943

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
AUG 17 1942

SYMPHONY THRILLS LOWELL AUDIENCE—Greater-Lowell turned out magnificently yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra at Memorial Auditorium, for the benefit of Russian War Relief. In the photo, left to right, are Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner, general co-chairmen; Arthur Fiedler, guest conductor; Mrs. Fiedler, Bernhardt Weiser, guest pianist, and Professor Michael Harpovich of Harvard university, speaker.

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

LOWELL—Happily, as token of appreciation of fine music presented in behalf of a good cause, there was a near-capacity audience in Memorial Auditorium yesterday afternoon to greet Arthur Fiedler and 80 of the musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert for the benefit of Russian War Relief, Inc., an organization which is concentrating on supplying our Russian allies with urgently needed medical supplies and aid. That, in effect, is an effort to "keep 'em fighting."

Mr. Fiedler, the musicians of the orchestra, and Bernhard Weiser, solo pianist, gave their services for the occasion. Members of the local concert committee, headed by Harry U. Quinn and Julius Woessner as co-chairmen, and all who helped to promote the affair so successfully within the short space of two weeks, felt that they could be no less generous. This reviewer would like to pay a tribute of appreciation to each of the long list; but, perforce, in a review of this sort must be content with a blanket endorsement of their work. The fact is, that not for a long time, has there been an effort sponsored by civic organizations that so fully enlisted the aid of all elements in the city without regard to race, politics or creed. And that, in view of the urgency of the cause, was tremendously gratifying. It was proof, too, that our people, and especially the younger generation, appreciated the opportunity to hear good music.

The Relief Appeal

As for the motive of Russian relief the force of the appeal was shown by the generous response to the collection taken up by the picturesque group of young women in Russian peasant costume during the intermission. There was the testimony of one of them, Miss Nancy Robertson, that her basket contained a $10 bill. And all said there were many of other denominations. So there should be an interesting report to make later. The collection was the sequel to a resume of the record of Russia since the Nazi invasion by Professor Michael Karpovich, associate professor of history at Harvard university. Encouraging was his prediction that despite the grave situation in the northern Caucasus, the Russians would keep the armies intact to beat the Nazis in the end. Supplementing his talk was a stirring two-minute appeal by Dr. Claude M. Fuess, headmaster of neighboring Phillips academy, Andover.

The Music

Thus we come to the music. This opened with a stirring performance of "The Star Spangled Banner." Fittingly enough, what was an all-Russian program culminated, as Mr. Fiedler announced with something American as an extra number, "Salute to the Fighting Forces," an arrangement by Peter Bodge, of Boston, of the favorite songs of our military and naval forces that was greeted with warm enthusiasm by the audience, which rose at the climax of "God Bless America."

It was a colorful program of Russian music which Mr. Fiedler had provided for us, for the most part bright and stirring and of strong rhythmic quality. Only when the Glazounov arrangement of the Song of Volga Boatmen was given as an encore was there a reversion to Slavic melancholy. And its plaintive strains clearly touched the hearts of many in the audience.

Dapper and dynamic, Arthur Fiedler brought out the rich qualities of the orchestra to the full in the "Wedding Procession," from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or" and in the merry overture from Glika's opera "Russian and Ludmilla." The third movement from Tschaikowsky's Sixth and last symphony was given with all the fervor and emotion that characterized the last work of the composer. Mr. Fiedler knows how to infuse the main theme in march tempo with pulsating life and movement. Played as his musicians responded to his beat, it was stirring music, thoroughly Russian.

Needless to say, the same composer's "Marche Slav," with the deep tones of the brasses to sound the old Russian hymn, made its customary appeal.

Novel Music

This, including the "Flight of the Bumble Bee" for good measure, with a facile flute to simulate it, was all familiar music. For novelty, here at least, there were the two dance movements by Shostakovitch. Friday at Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitsky, his new Seventh Symphony, was given its first American concert performance. This was written while Leningrad was under the fire of Nazis. Naturally, by report, it is tinged with the composer's thoughts of war and all that it means to his country of toil and tragedy. But the two little dances on yesterday's program were Shostakovitch in a gay mood. To this reviewer the orchestral cackle of the Polka suggested the barnyard.

The ensuing Russian Dance was reminiscent of a rural carnival. Each was cleverly orchestrated in comparatively simple fashion.

Unless we are mistaken, yesterday's performance of the new Piano Concerto by Aram Khatchatourian, was the second in public, the first having been given under the same auspices at the Pops last month. Bernhard Weiser, young American pianist, was the soloist. The composer is a contemporary of Shastokovitch and about the same age and is of Caucasian-Armenian origin. Under Mr. Weiser's nimble fingers and with the well adjusted orchestral background moulded by Mr. Fiedler and his men, this was exciting as contrasted with ingratiating music. To use architectural terms, it suggests the skyscraper or the industrial plant rather than the Parthenon. But there is no denying that it stirs the pulses. Nothing lackadaisical about this concerto, albeit in form at least, it follows the traditional pattern. If the performer pastes the piano, that is what the composer calls for. There is a suggestion of lyricism in the quieter second movement, although one doubts whether it justifies a Boston critic's description as haunting. The furious finale provides brilliant pianistic fireworks and sonorous orchestra background. The obvious difficulties of the score and the rapid-fire pace had no terrors for young Mr. Weiser. He had the technical means for display. And this listener has a notion that, given another medium, the pianist could shine in the more songful mood. At any rate, time will tell whether the popular tunesmiths will transcribe themes for this concerto for the benefit of the lovers of jive. One saw a possibility in one melodious strain in the final movement. Let it be said that Mr. Weiser was warmly applauded by the audience and musicians after his tour de force and on the stage there were the customary handshakes all around.

It ought to be said that Lawrence, Haverhill, Nashua and other cities sent their quotas to the concert. Mrs. Fiedler and friends came up from Boston for the occasion. Previous to the concert the musicians were entertained at lunch in the auditorium. Immediately after the program they left for Boston where they were due for the last Sunday concert of the season in the evening on the Charles river esplanade.

R

Berlio.

Oct. 17- 1942

Koussevitzky Plays Music From 'Romeo'

By L. A. Sloper

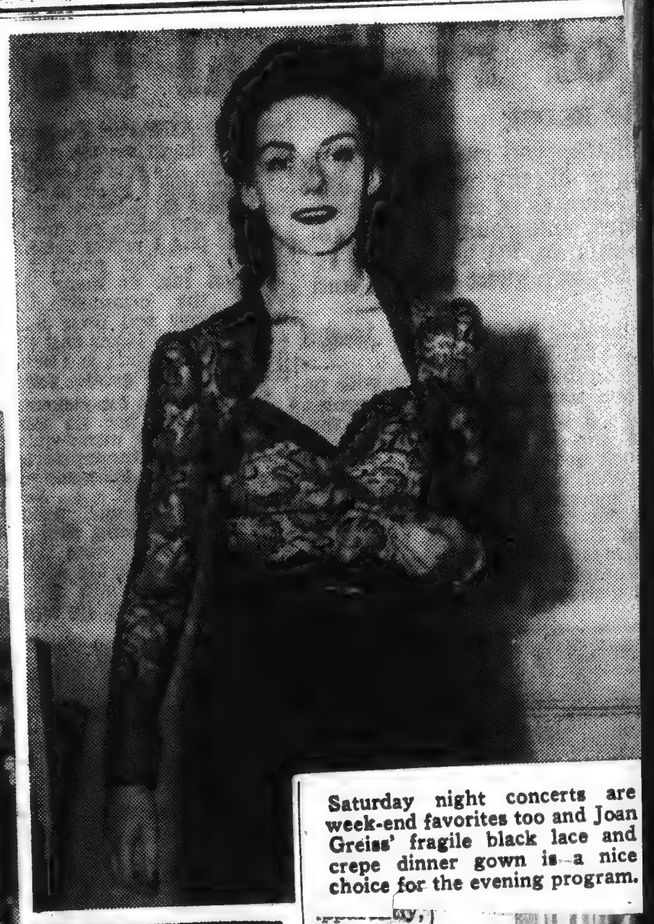
Dr. Koussevitzky offered an important revival for his second program of the Boston Symphony season (Oct. 16-17). This consisted of the three instrumental movements from Berlioz's Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The entire symphony has never been performed by the Boston orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky had never directed any part of it before in Boston. Mr. Toscanini and the Philharmonic-Symphony presented the complete work last week in New York. Comment on that performance will be found elsewhere in this edition. Apparently the movements that call for voices were not found to have added much.

Why Dr. Koussevitzky has so long delayed submitting his impression of the three instrumental movements is hard to guess. Indeed, it is not easy to think why he has not played more of the music of this composer. He has done the "Roman Carnival" Overture and the Symphony "Fantastique," to be sure, but he seems to be very belatedly arriving at a decision to offer us these "Romeo" excerpts, and "Harold in Italy," which he has also promised

STON SUNDAY GLOBE—SEPTEMBER 27, 1942

AND

Symphony



Saturday night concerts are week-end favorites too and Joan Greiss' fragile black lace and crepe dinner gown is a nice choice for the evening program.

Few concerts are missed by the Sears family. Mrs. Benjamin Gardiner (Elizabeth Sears) will be on hand as usual for the first program.

Perfect costume for the traditional Friday concerts is Ellen Moseley's slim black corduroy suit.

Society AND Symphony

The stirring strains of the national anthem will bring an audience of thousands to their feet on that much anticipated Friday afternoon in October which marks the opening of another season of Boston Symphony concerts under the conducting genius of Serge Koussevitsky.

Saturday night concerts are week-end favorites too and Joan Greiss' fragile black lace and crepe dinner gown is a nice choice for the evening program.

Perfect costume for the traditional Friday concerts is Ellen Moseley's slim black corduroy suit.

Few concerts are missed by the Sears family. Mrs. Benjamin Gardiner (Elizabeth Sears) will be on hand as usual for the first program.

urned out magnificently yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Russian War Relief. In the photo, left to right, are Harry U. guest conductor; Mrs. Fiedler, Bernhardt Weiser, guest pianist, Berlio.

R

Oct. 17- 1942

Koussevitzky Plays Music From 'Romeo'

By L. A. Sloper

Dr. Koussevitzky offered an important revival for his second program of the Boston Symphony season (Oct. 16-17). This consisted of the three instrumental movements from Berlioz's Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The entire symphony has never been performed by the Boston orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky had never directed any part of it before in Boston. Mr. Toscanini and the Philharmonic-Symphony presented the complete work last week in New York. Comment on that performance will be found elsewhere in this edition. Apparently the movements that call for voices were not found to have added much.

Why Dr. Koussevitzky has so long delayed submitting his impression of the three instrumental movements is hard to guess. Indeed, it is not easy to think why he has not played more of the music of this composer. He has done the "Roman Carnival" Overture and the Symphony "Fantastique," to be sure, but he seems to be very belatedly arriving at a decision to offer us these "Romeo" excerpts, and "Harold in Italy," which he has also promised tasted defeat—has seen the British, for example, bury our national capital, has seen rebels advancing towards Washington, has been through the valley of despair known in our history as Valley Forge. Japan, on the other hand, has never known defeat. Her first intimation of defeat came when Doolittle's angels flew over Tokio. Now, however, with the Yanks rolling on on the Road Back, Jap-

Boston Egg Market Prices at Noon Today

BOSTON, Aug. 17 (UP)—The Boston market for nearby eggs continued firm today, with wholesale prices unchanged. Receipts again were light and trading was limited.

At the same time, the Japanese government has been saying to its people that this is a racial war, a war of the Jap race against all other races, Asiatic, as well as European.

In other words, the Japs are not only kidding the Axis colaborators — they're kidding themselves. One gets the idea, and quite rightly, I believe, that they've gone nuts!

The march to push her out of countries she has stolen and despoiled is on today at Tulagi, Tomorrow, Guam. The next day, Wake. The next day, the Dutch East Indies, HongKong, Shanghai, Singapore, the are all in the Allies' time-table now. Japan's claims to Korea, Manchuria, Formosa, are not eternal or sacred, as she has believed right along.

The hypochondriac, the megalomaniac that is Japan is going through a nervous breakdown that will shatter her for centuries to come. That is obvious, now.

Sometime ago, the Japanese ambassador in Berlin, Admiral Oshima, wrote in the Voelkischer Beobachter—the noted Nazi newspaper—that the "Russian" spirit and the Japanese "Samurai" spirit are the same. He went on to say that the war is not a racial war, but is an ideological war between the Axis on the one hand and the "decrepit" Democracies on the other.

As Prof. Plomer points out:

"With the smile and the bow goes a habit of calling crude things by fine names. Pretending that their ferocious onslaught on China was not a war of aggression to prepare the way for cruel exploitation, they chose to call it 'an incident'.

maintaining Great Illusions, for ese" saying—is now her death-note, her death-rattle.

Her high-fallutin' talk of "co-prosperity" has been exposed as "prosperity for Japan"—the "co-" meaning enslavement of others—Chinese, Burmese, Filipinos, Melanese and others.

Lowell Youth Rises Rapidly With U. S. Engineers

LOWELL—Edward T. McFadden, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. McFadden, 57 Melrose avenue, has been advanced to the rank of chief of plant and equipment with the U. S. engineers in Panama, according to word received here today.

He left Lowell several months ago for a post with the government in the south and has received several promotions in the short time he has been there.

The flame throwers used in European warfare develop a heat of 2000 degrees and have a range of 1000 yards.

The British have held the fortress, Rock of Gibraltar, since 1704.

After inquiring about Hawkins' draft status, Judge Reynolds sent him to jail.

the wife testified she was the mother of six children and worked as a waitress to help support her family.

THE BOSTON SU 27, 1942

Berlio

Oct. 17- 1942

Koussevitzky Plays Music From 'Romeo'

By L. A. Sloper

Dr. Koussevitzky offered an important revival for his second program of the Boston Symphony season (Oct. 16-17). This consisted of the three instrumental movements from Berlioz's Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The entire symphony has never been performed by the Boston orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky had never directed any part of it before in Boston. Mr. Toscanini and the Philharmonic-Symphony presented the complete work last week in New York. Comment on that performance will be found elsewhere in this edition. Apparently the movements that call for voices were not found to have added much.

Why Dr. Koussevitzky has so long delayed submitting his impression of the three instrumental movements is hard to guess. Indeed, it is not easy to think why he has not played more of the music of this composer. He has done the "Roman Carnival" Overture and the Symphony "Fantastique," to be sure, but he seems to be very belatedly arriving at a decision to offer us these "Romeo" excerpts, and "Harold in Italy," which he has also promised for this season. Yet the music of Berlioz would seem to be just Dr. Koussevitzky's dish.

Certainly it proved to be so yesterday, as it had with the "Fantastique." The Love Scene was full of poetry and of fervor, the "Queen Mab" Scherzo was brilliantly and exquisitely realized, Romeo's Melancholy was nostalgically recorded, and the Capulets' Feast was noisily jubilant. The reading of the Scherzo, in particular, was imaginatively inspired, and the virtuosity of the orchestra was strikingly demonstrated throughout.

It would not be an exaggeration to call Berlioz the Wonder Man of Music. Remember that this score, with its superb orchestration, was written in 1838, and then consider the debt that is owed to its composer by nearly everybody from Liszt and Wagner to Sibelius and Shostakovitch. The man had all the emotional extravagance of an era of inflated rhetoric, but he was an authentic genius.

In the first half of the program Dr. Koussevitzky provided a lively performance of Samuel Barber's lively Overture, "The School for Scandal," and an eloquent one of Brahms' Third Symphony. And how odd it is to find a Brahms symphony—even the Third—taking second place on a Koussevitzky program.

The Friday afternoon audience received Mr. Barber's Overture politely, called the conductor back once or maybe twice after the Brahms, and applauded long enough after the Berlioz to encourage him to call the men to their feet twice. But there was no galvanism in the air. Apparently, this year it's Shostakovitch.

urned out magnificently yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston f Russian War Relief. In the photo, left to right, are Harry U.
, guest conductor; Mrs. Fiedler, Bernhardt Weiser, guest pianist,

Society's

The stirring strains of the national anthem will bring an audience of thousands to their feet on that much anticipated Friday afternoon in October which marks the opening of another season of Boston Symphony concerts under the conducting genius of Serge Koussevitsky.

of Fictional Det

NE BRUSH

mara, who reads a book a gry at the mystery-story is enough of certain of their lges, and young Mrs. Mac-minute, I'll let her tell it.
wn, as a guest column, and unt Ada had said,' etc. Well, I on't LIKE that! I want to scrame on that bloody corpse with no ore warning than my heroine

ad. I want to be horrified, too, d not all carefully padded for ock in advance.

"Well, that's about all the maiden uncertain vintage does, except r one thing more. She WILL go to the attic of the abandoned use on Dimlit Lane where already people have met horrible deaths.
rthermore, she WILL go alone, and she ALWAYS drops he light in the driveway. It ser right that she gets hit over th
It's only that I know she's g and I lose all patience with h

"You will have got the ide all this that I prefer the har school . . . but you'll be I've got just as many gri about the out-of-the-side mouth boys and their dark and their clip joints and the taxi-driver friends, as I have the others (the gentler folk?

"It's just that the sickenin of the hero's jaw as that driven into it is never quite citing to me as the mysteriou on the winding staircase of Hall at midnight . . . so have quite so much troubl him. (Funny thing, though he gets on the screen with phrey Bogart playing him, lieve anything, and get palms just sitting in the Filene's

Perfect costume for the traditional Fri is Ellen Moseley's slim black corduroy

$2.25 flowere
COTTON D Dirndl style—and slit pockets! Tai collar. Rose or h color. Sizes 3 in cotton or spun rayo

LITTLE $3 WARM plaid D

Few concerts are Sears family. Mrs. B iner (Elizabeth Sear hand as usual for the tasted defeat—has seen the British, for example, burn our national capital, has seen rebels advancing towards Washington, has been through the vale of despair known in our history as Valley Forge.

Japan, on the other hand, has never known defeat. Her first intimation of defeat came when Doolittle's angels flew over Tokio. Now, however, with the Yanks rolling on the Road Back, Japanese [illegible]

Boston Egg Market Prices at Noon Today

BOSTON, Aug. 17 (UP)—The Boston market for nearby eggs continued firm today, with wholesale prices unchanged. Receipts again were light and trading was limited.

maintaining Great Illusions, for ese" saying—is now her death-note, her death-rattle.

Her high-falutin' talk of "co-prosperity" has been exposed as "prosperity for Japan"—the "co-" meaning enslavement of others—Chinese, Burmese, Filipinos, Melanese and others.

As Prof. Plomer points out:

"With the smile and the bow goes a habit of calling crude things by fine names. Pretending that their ferocious onslaught on China was not a war of aggression to prepare the way for cruel exploitation, they chose to call it 'an incident'.

The march to push her out of countries she has stolen and despoiled is on today at Tulagi, Tomorrow, Guam. The next day, Wake. The next day, the Dutch East Indies, Hongkong, Shanghai, Singapore, the are all in the Allies' time-table now. Japan's claims to Korea, Manchuria, Formosa, are not eternal or sacred, as she has believed right along.

Sometime ago, the Japanese ambassador in Berlin, Admiral Oshima, wrote in the Voelkischer Beobachter—the noted Nazi newspaper—that the "Prussian" spirit and the Japanese "Samurai" spirit are the same. He went on to say that the war is not a racial war, but is an ideological war between the Axis on the one hand and the "decrepit" Democracies on the other.

At the same time, the Japanese government has been saying to its people that this is a racial war, a war of the Jap race against all other races, Asiatic, as well as European.

In other words, the Japs are not only kidding the Axis collaborators — they're kidding themselves. One gets the idea, and quite rightly, I believe, that they've gone nuts!

The Japs, for example, have been saying that the Axis powers are fighting a war to end all wars, and that the Japanese people are fighting for the right to live in peace and harmony with the rest of the world.

The hypocondriac, the megalomaniac that is Japan is going through a nervous breakdown that will shatter her for centuries to come. That is obvious, now.

Lowell Youth Rises Rapidly With U. S. Engineers

LOWELL—Edward T. McFadden, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. McFadden, 57 Melrose avenue, has been advanced to the rank of chief of plant and equipment with the U. S. engineers in Panama, according to word received here today.

He left Lowell several months ago for a post with the government in the south and has received several promotions in the short time he has been there.

The flame throwers used in European warfare develop a heat of 2000 degrees and have a range of 1000 yards.

The British have held the fortress, Rock of Gibraltar, since 1704.

After inquiring about Hawkins' draft status, Judge Reynolds sent him to jail.

the wife testified she was the mother of six children and worked as a waitress to help support her family.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Boston Symphony Back From Tour—

Prokofieff's 'Kijé' Suite Is Revived

Sat Nov. 28th—By L. A. Sloper

As his first program to follow the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York visit, Dr. Koussevitzky chose for this week's concerts in Symphony Hall three familiar pieces: Mozart's Symphony in C major, No. 34 (K. 338), Prokofieff's orchestral suite derived from his music to the film, "Lieutenant Kijé," and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

The Mozart (the one without a Minuet) was played brilliantly, as it always is by this orchestra and this conductor; perhaps a little too brilliantly, for again yesterday it was possible to feel that the performance would have been improved by modifications of tempi and dynamics. For this listener, the Andante was too slow and the Finale too fast, and the contrast between them too sharp. Moreover, the dynamic shading was sometimes exaggerated. But the virtuosity of the performance, if achieved at the expense of certain musical values, brought a storm of applause.

The Prokofieff Suite, along with "Peter and the Wolf," is the kind of music its composer considers best suited to Bostonian tastes; or so he intimated a few years ago after one of his bigger works had been coolly received here.

But an artist is not always the best judge of his own work. Indeed, it has happened before that little pieces tossed off by a composer as a jeu d'esprit have turned out to be longer lived than some of his more pretentious compositions.

Now Prokofieff is of course a composer of distinguished ability, who has unfortunately been partly overshadowed by the bright light of Stravinsky. Nevertheless, I have found Prokofieff's lighter works generally more rewarding than his serious ones; and so long as we hear the Classical Symphony, "Peter," and "Kijé," I shall not pine for too many revivals of the piano concertos, "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," or the "Scythian Suite."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 22 1942

Miaskovsky Symphony Will Be Presented Here

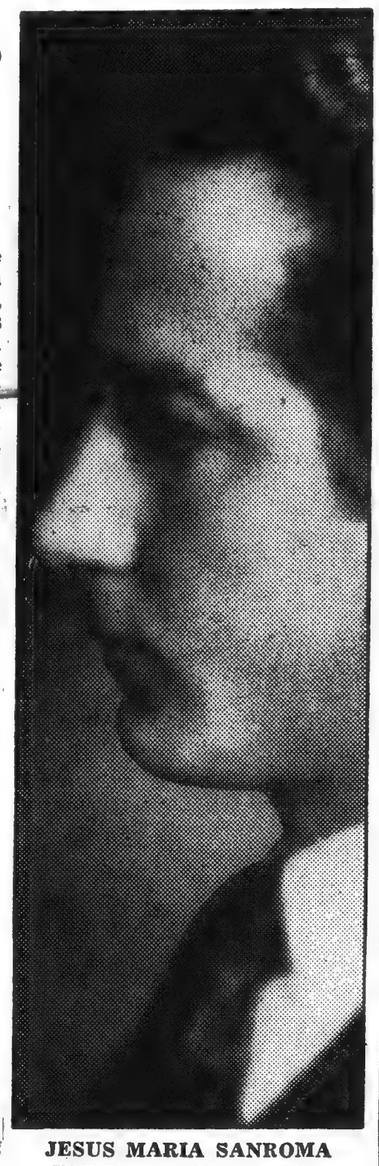
Boston Orchestra to Introduce Russian's Work Here.

THE playing for the first time here of a symphony by the Russian composer, Nikolai Miaskovsky, and the presentation of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist, will be special features of the Boston Symphony's second concert of the season Tuesday evening at the Metropolitan Theatre, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The Miaskovsky symphony is the 21st of his remarkable string of 23. It is short, being in one movement, and had its first concert performance by the orchestra in Boston last month. Although he has been one of Russia's leading composers for a long time, Miaskovsky's works now are gradually becoming known outside his native land through concert and radio performances.

Russia will also furnish another symphony on the program, Tschaikowski's Fourth being scheduled as the final number. The order follows:

Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie (Arranged for string orchestra by Ettore Pinelli) ..... Corelli
Symphony No. 21, Op. 51 (In one movement; first performance in Providence) ..... Miaskovsky
Orchestra Suite from the ballet "Petrouchka" ..... Stravinsky
Russian Dance — Petrouchka — Grand Carnival — Nurses' Dance — The Bear and the Peasant Playing a Hand Organ—The Merchant and the Gypsies—The Dance of the Coachmen and Grooms—The Masqueraders.
Piano solo by Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 4 in F-minor, Op. 36 ..... Tschaikowski
I. Andante sostenuto. Moderato con anima in movimento di valse
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo pizzicato ostinato: Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco



JESUS MARIA SANROMA
Will Be Symphony Soloist

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

NOV 20 1942

Boston Symphony Opens N.Y. Season

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its fifty-seventh season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the musicians union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this Winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

Dr. Koussevitzky played two symphonies for his opening — Haydn's 88th in G Major, and Dmitri Shostakovich's now famous Seventh. It required 69½ minutes actual playing time for the orchestra to traverse the Shostakovich score, 3½ minutes more than Arturo Toscanini needed four weeks ago. But the performance was possibly the finest the music has had so far in this country; so good, in fact, that only thirteen subscribers walked out of the lower floor, whereas at earlier performances several times that number gave up before the end.

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

NOV 20 1942

Symphony Opening Sets New Mark

By JOHN SELBY

New York — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its fifty-seventh season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians' Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No Word of Agreement

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

Performance Sets Mark

Dr. Koussevitzky played two symphonies for his opening—Haydn's 88th in G Major, and Dmitri Shestakovich's now famous seventh. It required 69½ minutes actual playing time for the orchestra to traverse the Shostakovich score, 3½ minutes more than Arturo Toscanini needed four weeks ago.

But the performance was possibly the finest the music has had so far in this country; so good, in fact, that only 13 subscribers walked out of the lower floor, whereas at earlier performances several times that number gave up before the end.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

NOV 22 1942

Koussevitzky Gives Martini, Beethoven

By GRENA BENNETT

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in an interesting program devised as a contrast in new and old symphonic compositions.

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in an interesting program devised as a contrast in new and old symphonic compositions.

Only two numbers comprised the list which consisted of Martini's recently composed First Symphony and Beethoven's monumental "Eroica." The first of these was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which was established in memory of the late Mme. Koussevitzky and is dedicated to her.

The Czech composer drew generously from the folk melodies of his native country and the work is a lively and imaginative example of orchestral writing with pages of muscular dynamics.

ARTISTIC RENDITION.

The effects were disclosed with the incomparable beauty of tone characteristic of the Boston band; fastidious balance of its various sections; and distinguished in the projection of the composer's individual harmonization and expression. Mr. Martini shared with the conductor in several enthusiastic re-calls.

The instrumentalists, after the brief intermission, then applied themselves to the immorial "Eroica," whose language was unfolded with profound and vital proclamation, each movement achieved with arresting eloquence. The batonist's genius in interpretation sharply etched each and every detail with which the composer sought to illustrate his ideas and inventions, and these were set forth with classical dignity and a broad scope of tonal variety.

[5]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Boston Symphony Back From Tour—

Prokofieff's 'Kijé' Suite Is Revived

Sat Nov. 28th —By L. A. Sloper

As his first program to follow the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York visit, Dr. Koussevitzky chose for this week's concerts in Symphony Hall three familiar pieces: Mozart's Symphony in C major, No. 34 (K. 338), Prokofieff's orchestral suite derived from his music to the film, "Lieutenant Kijé," and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

The Mozart (the one without a Minuet) was played brilliantly, as it always is by this orchestra and this conductor; perhaps a little too brilliantly, for again yesterday it was possible to feel that the performance would have been improved by modifications of tempi and dynamics. For this listener, the Andante was too slow and the Finale too fast, and the contrast between them too sharp. Moreover, the dynamic shading was sometimes exaggerated. But the virtuosity of the performance, if achieved at the expense of certain musical values, brought a storm of applause.

The Prokofieff Suite, along with "Peter and the Wolf," is the kind of music its composer considers best suited to Bostonian tastes; or so he intimated a few years ago after one of his bigger works had been coolly received here.

But an artist is not always the best judge of his own work. Indeed, it has happened before that little pieces tossed off by a composer as a jeu d'esprit have turned out to be longer lived than some of his more pretentious compositions.

Now Prokofieff is of course a composer of distinguished ability, who has unfortunately been partly overshadowed by the bright light of Stravinsky. Nevertheless, I have found Prokofieff's lighter works generally more rewarding than his serious ones; and so long as we hear the Classical Symphony, "Peter," and "Kijé," I shall not pine for too many revivals of the piano concertos, "Sept, Ils Sont Sept," or the "Scythian Suite."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
NOV 22 1942

Miaskovsky Symphony Will Be Presented Here

Boston Orchestra to Introduce Russian's Work Here.

THE playing for the first time here of a symphony by the Russian composer, Nikolai Miaskovsky, and the presentation of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist, will be special features of the Boston Symphony's second concert of the season Tuesday evening at the Metropolitan Theatre, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The Miaskovsky symphony is the 21st of his remarkable string of 23. It is short, being in one movement, and had its first concert performance by the orchestra in Boston last month. Although he has been one of Russia's leading composers for a long time, Miaskovsky's works now are gradually becoming known outside his native land through concert and radio performances.

Russia will also furnish another symphony on the program, Tschaikowski's Fourth being scheduled as the final number. The order follows:

Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie (Arranged for string orchestra by Ettore Pinelli) ..... Corelli
Symphony No. 21, Op. 51 (In one movement; first performance in Providence) ..... Miaskovsky
Orchestra Suite from the ballet "Petrouchka" ..... Stravinsky
Russian Dance — Petrouchka — Grand Carnival — Nurses' Dance — The Bear and the Peasant Playing a Hand Organ—The Merchant and the Gypsies—The Dance of the Coachmen and Grooms—The Masqueraders.
Piano solo by Jesus Maria Sanroma
Symphony No. 4 in F-minor, Op. 36 ..... Tschaikowski
I. Andante sostenuto. Moderato con anima in movimento di valse
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo pizzicato ostinato: Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

◇ ◇ ◇

JESUS MARIA SANROMA
Will Be Symphony Soloist

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
NOV 20 1942

Boston Symphony Opens N.Y. Season

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its fifty-seventh season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the musicians union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this Winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

Dr. Koussevitzky played two symphonies for his opening — Haydn's 88th in G Major, and Dmitri Shostakovich's now famous Seventh. It required 69½ minutes actual playing time for the orchestra to traverse the Shostakovich score, 3½ minutes more than Arturo Toscanini needed four weeks ago. But the performance was possibly the finest the music has had so far in this country; so good, in fact, that only thirteen subscribers walked out of the lower floor, whereas at earlier performances several times that number gave up before the end.

This Clipping From UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
NOV 20 1942

Symphony Opening Sets New Mark

By JOHN SELBY

New York — (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its fifty-seventh season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians' Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No Word of Agreement

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

Performance Sets Mark

Dr. Koussevitzky played two symphonies for his opening—Haydn's 88th in G Major, and Dmitri Shostakovich's now famous seventh. It required 69½ minutes actual playing time for the orchestra to traverse the Shostakovich score, 3½ minutes more than Arturo Toscanini needed four weeks ago.

But the performance was possibly the finest the music has had so far in this country; so good, in fact, that only 13 subscribers walked out of the lower floor, whereas at earlier performances several times that number gave up before the end.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
NOV 22 1942

Koussevitzky Gives Martini, Beethoven

By GRENA BENNETT

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in an interesting program devised as a contrast in new and old symphonic compositions.

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Orchestra at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon in an interesting program devised as a contrast in new and old symphonic compositions.

Only two numbers comprised the list which consisted of Martini's recently composed First Symphony and Beethoven's monumental "Eroica." The first of these was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation which was established in memory of the late Mme. Koussevitzky and is dedicated to her.

The Czech composer drew generously from the folk melodies of his native country and the work is a lively and imaginative example of orchestral writing with pages of muscular dynamics.

ARTISTIC RENDITION.

The effects were disclosed with the incomparable beauty of tone characteristic of the Boston band; fastidious balance of its various sections; and distinguished in the projection of the composer's individual harmonization and expression. Mr. Martini shared with the conductor in several enthusiastic re-calls.

The instrumentalists, after the brief intermission, then applied themselves to the immortal "Eroica," whose language was unfolded with profound and vital proclamation, each movement achieved with arresting eloquence. The batonist's genius in interpretation sharply etched each and every detail with which the composer sought to illustrate his ideas and inventions, and these were set forth with classical dignity and a broad scope of tonal variety.

[5]

This Clipping From ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE
DEC 6 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYERS JOIN UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 5. (UP)—The 105 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, its famous maestro, became members of the American Federation of Musicians with the signing of a contract between the orchestra management and the AFM.

James C. Petrillo, president of AFM, announced that the contract was signed after his organization had amended its by-laws on a point demanded by the Boston Symphony regarding importation of talent.

Petrillo said that every one of the 60 Symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada is now a member of his organization. The authority to change the by-laws in conformity with the request of the Boston organization was given to Petrillo at an extraordinary meeting of the 18 locals of AFM.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
DEC 7 1942

Boston Symphony back on air Dec. 26

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—The Boston

signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 7 - 1942

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AGAIN TO BROADCAST

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air, after an absence of five years, December 26, under a long-term contract with the blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Returning To Air

NEW YORK (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From ALLENTOWN, PA.
CALL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to the Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARYSVILLE, O.
TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

ORCHESTRA SIGNED

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term Symphony orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station Blue network.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO RADIO

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchester will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra on Air Again Dec. 26

New York, Dec. 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Fed. Pres. James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
DEC 7 1942

Boston Symphony Signs for Radio Concert Series

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46 week season.

This Clipping From GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY BACK ON AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

BLUE NETWORK SIGNS BOSTON SYMPHONY FOR SERIES OF CONCERTS

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (U.P.)—The Blue Network announced today that it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, December 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the AFL American Federation of Musicians, will bring the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the Musicians' Union.

The orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America to be heard over a radio network. It gave a series of radio concerts in 1926 under Dr. Koussevitsky.

The first concert on December 26 will be from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

Commences Broadcasts Dec. 26 After An Absence of Five Years

NEW YORK, Dec. 6-AP-The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 154-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to he radio.

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return to the Air

NEW YORK—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The Boston symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE CONCERT SERIES OVER AIR

New York, Dec. 6 (UP)—The Blue network announced today that it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, December 26th.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston Orchestra in signing a contract with the AF of L American Federation of Musicians will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Kousevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organi-

This Clipping From PITTSFIELD, MASS.

contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

Boston Symphony Orchestra And Pops To Be Broadcast

NEW YORK—A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, was announced yesterday by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 and will be carried over 145 stations, Woods said.

The broadcasts are made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the Federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, and had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

The contract with the Blue network company, Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestral weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Symphony and Pops

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will bring the Pops concerts under Arthur Fielder until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles River esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was hoped that there would be a resumption of broadcasting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood music shed, Lenox.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important concession permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, it was said, will cover several seasons, rather than as is coustomary with contracts with such orchestras, just one season.

This Clipping From BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Concerts to Be Broadcast Weekly

NEW YORK, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

Symphony to Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 (AP). — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

zation by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the Musician's Union.

Tne Boston orchestra was the first symhony orchestra in America to be heard over a radio network. It gave a series of radio concerts in 1926 under Dr. Koussevitzky.

The first concert on December 26th will be from 8:15 to 9:15 P. M. EWT.

46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation Pres. James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Radio Deal

New York, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (ALF) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE
DEC 7 - 1942

Orchestra Returns to Air This Month

NEW YORK, Dec. 7. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air, after an absence of five years, December 26, under a long-term contract with the blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE
DEC 6 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYERS JOIN UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 5. (UP)—The 105 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, its famous maestro, became members of the American Federation of Musicians with the signing of a contract between the orchestra management and the AFM.

James C. Petrillo, president of AFM, announced that the contract was signed after his organization had amended its by-laws on a point demanded by the Boston Symphony regarding importation of talent.

Petrillo said that every one of the 60 Symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada is now a member of his organization. The authority to change the by-laws in conformity with the request of the Boston organization was given to Petrillo at an extraordinary meeting of the 18 locals of AFM.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TIMES
DEC 7 1942

Boston Symph... back

...Petrillo. ...Petrillo said that ...contract would permit the ...chestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 7 - 1942

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA AGAIN TO BROADCAST

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air, after an absence of five years, December 26, under a long-term contract with the blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Returning To Air

NEW YORK (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From ALLENTOWN, PA.
CALL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to the Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network; it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MARYSVILLE, O.
TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

ORCHESTRA SIGNED

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO RADIO

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchester will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra on Air Again Dec. 26

New York, Dec. 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Fed. Pres. James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
DEC 7 1942

Boston Symphony Signs for Radio Concert Series

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46 week season.

This Clipping From GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY BACK ON AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation Presid...

Tappin's Package Store
8 Connors St. Tel. 1045
Easy Parking

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

BLUE NETWORK SIGNS BOSTON SYMPHONY FOR SERIES OF CONCERTS

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (U.P.)—The Blue Network announced today that it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, December 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the AFL American Federation of Musicians, will bring the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the Musicians' Union.

The orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America to be heard over a radio network. It gave a series of radio concerts in 1926 under Dr. Koussevitsky.

The first concert on December 26 will be from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

Commences Broadcasts Dec. 26 After An Absence of Five Years

NEW YORK, Dec. 6-AP-The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 154-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return to the Air

NEW YORK—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The Boston symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N. Y.
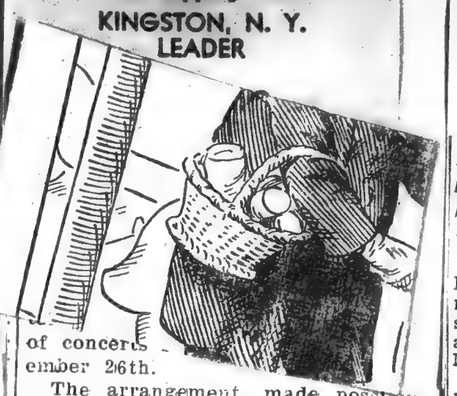
LEADER



...of concerts ...ember 26th.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston Orchestra in signing a contract with the AF of L American Federation of Musicians will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Kousevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organi-

This Clipping From PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra And Pops To Be Broadcast

NEW YORK—A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, was announced yesterday by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 and will be carried over 145 stations, Woods said.

The broadcasts are made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the Federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, and had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

The contract with the Blue network company, Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestral weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Symphony and Pops

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will bring the Pops concerts under Arthur Fielder until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles River esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was hoped that there would be a resumption of broadcasting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood music shed, Lenox.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important concession permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, it was said, will cover several seasons, rather than as is coustomary with contracts with such orchestras, just one season.

This Clipping From BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Concerts to Be Broadcast Weekly

NEW YORK, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

Symphony to Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 (AP). — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return To Air

New York, Dec. 6—(AP)— The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation Pres. James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Radio Deal

New York, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (ALF) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE
DEC 7 - 1942

Orchestra Returns to Air This Month

NEW YORK, Dec. 7. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air, after an absence of five years, December 26, under a long-term contract with the blue network, it was announced yesterday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

[6]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From BRADENTON, FLA.
HERALD
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From ROME, N. Y.
SENTINEL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From GRAFTON, W. VA.
SENTINEL
DEC 8 - 1942

SYMPHONY TO STAY ON BLU

Contract Is Signed Giving Network Exclusive Radio Rights

NEW YORK, Dec. 8, (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Blu network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions, However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blu in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 9:30 tonight, repiacing the previously listed suspense drama. . . Now the Blu network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
TELEGRAM
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From OCALA, FLA.
BANNER

This Clipping From YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From OSWEGO, N. Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From DURHAM, N. C.
SUN

This Clipping From GLEN FALLS, N. Y.
Times
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

New York —(AP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years under a long-term contract, it was announced yesterday. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over a 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by federation President James C. Petrillo. At that time Petrillo said the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Programs

War Time

...ony Signs ...BLU Network

...ny and Blue ... Contract; ...Dec. 26

...ing on "The American Petro... Problem," has been added ... CBS schedule for 8:30 Tues... night, replacing the previous... ted suspense drama . . . the Blue network indicates any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the ... Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

Twenty

IES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were ... in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
TELEGRAM
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From OCALA, FLA.
BANNER

This Clipping From YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From OSWEGO, N. Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From DURHAM, N. C.
SUN

This Clipping From GLEN FALLS, N. Y.
Times
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

New York —(AP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years under a long term contract, it was announced yesterday. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over a 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by federation President James C. Petrillo. At that time Petrillo said the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

pla... field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B... network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the ... Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs. * *

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

Programs
...ar Time

...ony Signs
...BLU Network

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

Twenty

IES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were ... in bringing this about Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
TELEGRAM
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From OCALA, FLA.
BANNER

This Clipping From YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From OSWEGO, N. Y.
PALLADIUM TIMES

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From DURHAM, N. C.
SUN

This Clipping From GLEN FALLS, N. Y.
Times
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 8 - 1942

Programs
War Time

ony Signs
BLU Network

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

New York —(AP)— The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years under a long term contract, it was announced yesterday. The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over a 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by federation President James C. Petrillo. At that time Petrillo said the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symph... Sign Long Term... First Broadcast ...

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B... network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing speal... leum... to th... day ni... ly lis... Now ... that a... place ... day nig... by Hedd... The fa... tinued. ... cluded a... on CBS.

Earl ... tir... rec... man ...
Mrs. J. E...

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7-1942

The Blue Network makes new... ment that Serge Koussevitzky and th... signed for 46 concerts a year over 145 stations, beginning Dec. 26. During the summer the Blue will carry the pop concerts from Symphony Hall, the open-air concerts from the Charles River Esplanade and, it is hoped, the annual Berkshire Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

* * *

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

U. S. BUILDINGS FAR TOO WARM CHECK SHOW

Twenty

IES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
CLARKSBURG, W. VA.

TO SEEK COMMISSION

FORT BRAGG, N. C.—[illegible]. Robert P. Hamell of 18 [illegible] Street, Glens Falls, N. Y. [illegible] by officials of the Artillery Replacement Center to seek a [illegible]

AT GRANGE SESSION

Mrs. Isabelle Harris of the Upper Ridge Road, state juvenile matron and Warren County Pomona Grange lecturer, is attending the New York State Grange meeting this week in Syracuse. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Ellsworth of Aviation Road are also attending.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8 (AP)—Th[illegible] work week in the bituminous coal mines will be lengthened to six days about the first of the year, production will go up and production of the fuel will soar to history's highest level, it was disclosed Monday.

A representative of a group of producers said the Office of Price Administration had agreed to price increases averaging 20 to 23 cents a ton, of which 12 to 15 cents is attributed to increased labor costs and eight cents to higher costs for materials and other items.

Programs

War Time

ony Signs BLU Network

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD
Eastern War Time

NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing of Arthur Fiedler, the Boston Pops conductor, as guest conductor for the Blue Network's broadcast of the Esplanade concerts from the Hatch Memorial Shell, Boston, on May 1, has been announced.

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

Twenty

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

ES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

For Sale 24

309 Chapel Hill St. P-193

HUNTLEY'S

Pay For It On Terms of $1.25 Week

EVERYTHING FOR $39.95

• Frames Repaired • Springs Reset
• Webbing Reset • Brand New Cover

2 PIECES $39.95 COMPLETE

REBUILD & RE-COVER YOUR OLD SUITE

We'll Put New Life Into Your Old Living Room Suite! Let Huntley's

THE ROSE AGENCY Inc.

LOVELY ALL-WOOL TILLED SILK COMforts. Many shades, beautiful and practical for holiday Gifts. Also a few antique pieces. Durham Mattress Co., near East Trinity Ave.

GIRL'S LARGE BICYCLE. CALL X-2211. Box 174—W. Durham.

BOSTON TERRIER PUPPIES. CALL X-8132.

FOR SALE: MAN'S BICYCLE. $30. CALL R-3385. 2930 Chapel Hill Rd.

Programs

ar Time

Boston Symphony Signs Up with the BLU Network

New York, Dec. 8—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the net works for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

ices field along w[illegible]
Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA
rtage of Fuel Mea othing to Most Wash ington Offices

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

T wenty

ES

Off to the Service; Those in Party.

The smallest crowd yet was at the Manchester station of the New York New Haven and Hartford Railroad this morning to see fifty-one of fifty-two men leave for service. Melvin E. Nowsch is in the Hartford hospital and his mother reported this fact to the local draft board. He is under the care of Dr. Maurice E. Pike. He is suffering from a physical collapse.

Train On Time

The train was right on time and a crowd, estimated at 400 was at the station saying last farewells to relatives and friends. While there were plenty of tears in evidence it was not a sad gathering. When one of the boy's name was called out by John F. Buckley, acting corporal, his friends rent the air with a loud cheer. Other groups were gathered around the inductees and all were smiling. A more cheerful air pervaded this cool crisp morning than at any other time since the inductees went into the service, it seemed.

List Of Selectees

Following are the names of the men who left today, with the exception of Nowsch:

Edward D. Atkinson.
Vincent V. Zableskos.
Frank A. Wenzel.

Save Lives
Of Scores

Brave Tars
Save Lives

Fifty-One S Leave for

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

(Eastern War Time)

NEW YORK—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both singers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Goussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

Twenty

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

ES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

[illegible]ices
[illegible]field along w[illegible]
Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period; is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From CLARKSBURG, W. VA.
TELEGRAM
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From OCALA, FLA.
BANNER
[illegible]
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
DEC 8 - 1942

After an absence of five years from the networks, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will be gin a new series on the Blue Network beginning Dec. 26 and each Saturday thereafter at 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., until May. The contract between the Boston Symphony and the Blue Network has just been completed for a long-term period and is reported exclusive for both signers.

The first season will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, and it is understood that the contract was to be for three seasons. The series of concerts beginning Dec. 26, will be followed by the famous "Pop" concerts under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler, the esplanade series and the "Berkshire Music Festival." Koussevitzky who is considered by many to be America's greatest conductor, will be in charge of most of the programs. There is already a strong possibility of commercial sponsorship with several big advertisers already interested.

Sec. of the Interior Harold L. Ickes will speak on "The American Petroleum Problem" at 9:30 p. m. over Columbia stations (WJR).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitzky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I 'played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

T wenty

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

ES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing [illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama . . . Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year on beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

LEATHER APRONS—WELDERS GLOVES
M. & E. ARMY STORE, 203 E. FEDERAL

WOMEN WELDERS
COVERALLS—OVERALLS

NOTICES

QUALITY—W. L. Moyer (successor to THE Bros.), 13 Oak Hill Ave. Phone 3014 Res. 2472S. We specialize in markers

MONUMENTS

WE WISH to express our sincere appreciation to our friends, neighbors, relatives and to Rev. Chas. F. McBride for their thoughtful kindness and expressions of sympathy at the loss of our beloved husband and father. Clarence O. Sprague MRS. ELLA WOOD SPRAGUE and GALE W. SPRAGUE.

CARD OF THANKS

Will receive friends this evening. Fu neral Wednesday, 2 p. m., at the fu neral home. Interment in Tod Ceme tery.

By C. E. LUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8— (AP) —Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

Baltimore Sun Finds A
erage 76 Degrees In Federal Offices

FAIL TO OBSERVE
RULING ON HEA

Shortage of Fuel Mea
Nothing to Most Wash ington Offices

T Wenty

U. S. BUILDINGS
FAR TOO WARM
CHECK SHOW

ES

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

New York, Dec. 8. (AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

were [illegible] bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

New York, Dec. 8.—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston symphony orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long time period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

[illegible] been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing [illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama [illegible] Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I 'played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

RULING ON HEA

Miss Florence Grace Saker, 317 William St., daughter of Mrs. Rose Van Geesen and the late John B. Saker, and Adelbert Seth Sexton, Stanville, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sexton, Utica, were married Saturday at Zion Episcopal Church.

The ceremony, which took place at 2:30 p. m., was performed by the Rev. Walworth Tyng, acting rector. John O. Lundblad was at the organ and Miss Helen Griffing sang "O Promise Me."

Mrs. Garry Spink, sister of the bride, was matron of honor, Daniel Sexton, brother of the bridegroom was best man, and ushers were John Saker and Edward Van Geesen, brothers of the bride.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, David William Saker, wore a soldier blue dress and hat and carried a bouquet of white roses and baby's breath. Her attendant wore a plum colored dress with fuchsia accessories and carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

The mother of the bride was attired in a blue velvet dress and hat, while the bridegroom's mother wore a dark blue dress and hat.

RADIO CONTRACT

By Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 8.—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part, the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

* * *

[illegible] and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing [illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama [illegible]. Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

Back Tom Moseley and End Max Mckinney Expected to Return for the Quarter-Final Test.

BY RAY KORNEGAY.

Come more cold or more rain or both, John Reagan's Bulldogs return to the gridiron today as they start preparing in earnest for Friday night's state quarter-final test against the Austin Maroons at Austin.

Coach Lamar Camp ordered the Bulldogs to their first field work since they conquered Robert E

TO BE AT FULL FORCE FRIDAY

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicianss' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

weeks [illegible] open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Major Henry L. Higginson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

[illegible] field along with NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama . . . Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

* * *

All the heros of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC. 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network. Concerts will be

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STATE JOURNAL
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

84—Houses for Sale

...AVO AV., N., 22 — 4 bedrooms, 2 ... Albert M. Green-...121.

83A—Hotels, Rooming Houses, Sale

CENTRAL—70-room hotel, rent or sale, cheap; 100% location. Morris Diamond, Dial 4-2323.

STATES AV.—Beachblock, beautiful guest house, 15 bedrooms, with running water, 3 baths; rent bargain, financed. Wm. H. Robinson, Dial 4-8161.

GUEST HOUSE — Ritz section, 12 rooms, $6500. Burch, 1301 Atlantic. Dial 4-3179.

HOTEL—100 rooms, 50 baths, ready to operate. Burch, 1301-03 Atlantic.

Immediate possession. No reasonable offer refused for low rental or below cost sale. Well adapted for storage space as well as any active business.

For further information apply Press-Union Publishing Co., Ohio and Atlantic avenues, or any realty broker.

Orchestra Will Go on the Air Beginning December 25

The Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, Dec. 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network company is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts trough the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop concerts, which will be given at Symphony hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Major Henry L. Higginson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers an conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York — (AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

...ices
...field along ...
Symphony and
the New York P...

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B... network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on S...nday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the ... Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, ... Peyton revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the

By United Press

NEW YORK, Dec. 7—The Blue Network announced today that it had signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a nonunion organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Returns to Radio

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 6 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

$10 to $300
Just Your Signature Alone
Mutual System Loans Inc.
7 E. 42nd ST.
MURRAY HILL
2-5788
MUTUAL

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

...ices
...field along w...
Symphony and
the New York P...

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B... network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama ... Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on S...nday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the ... Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
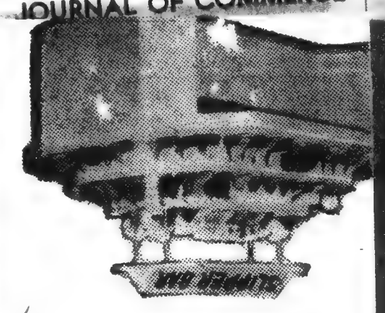
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE



turn to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network.

The symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

Esplanade, beginning in May.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

Blue Network Signs For Weekly Concert By Boston Symphony

New York, December 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's forty-six-week season over the 145-station network.

Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (American Federation of Labor) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo. At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] field along w[illegible] Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama . . . Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I 'played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs'?

$10 to $300
Just Your Signature Alone
Mutual System Loans Inc.
7 E. 42nd ST.
MURRAY HILL 2-5788
MUTUAL

INFORMATION OBSCURE

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

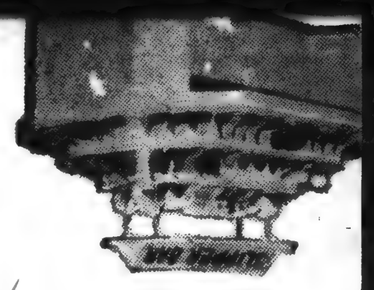
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.



Payments, on a mon
arranged to meet the responsible family.

Returning To Air On December 26

New York, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's forty-six-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade, beginning in May.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

* * *

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

This Clipping From
OMAHA, NEB.
EVENING WORLD-HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
REGISTER
DEC 7 - 1942

TO PUT BOSTON SYMPHONY BACK UPON NETWORK

NEW YORK, N. Y, (AP)—The Boston symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network.

The Boston symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing [illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the si will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Return To Air After Five Years

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced yesterday.

The concert will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

Back on Air Dec. 26

New York, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue network.

The symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] field along w[illegible] Symphony and [illegible] the New York P[illegible]

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York (AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS FOR RADIO

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (UP)—The Blue Network announced today that it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting December 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing of the Blue Network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] field along w[illegible] Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 (U. P.).—The Blue network announced today that it had signed a contract with the Boston symphony orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.), will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Resume Broadcasts

NEW YORK, Dec. 6, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing [illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

[illegible] along with NBC Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

PEACE CHAPEL
MICHIGAN ST. • CHERRY 6020
Ry. W. Moore

New York, Dec. 7.—(A. P.)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's forty-six-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

[7]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEADVILLE, PA.
TRIBUNE-REPUBLICAN
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 7. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Bos[illegible]phony, under Dr. Serge [illegible]ky, became the last [illegible] with a[illegible] orchestra in the [illegible] last Thu[illegible]

[illegible] Jam[illegible]

Team—	W	L	T	Pts.	Op
U. C. L. A.	5	1	0	152	61
Wash. State	5	1	1	126	66
U. S. C.	4	1	1	131	33
Stanford	5	2	0	171	66
Oregon State	4	4	0	150	138
Washington	3	3	2	86	60
California	3	4	0	74	96
Oregon	2	5	0	66	126
Idaho	1	5	0	41	161
Montana	0	6	0	16	206

Final standings [illegible] Pro League, West[illegible]

Team—	W	L	T	Pts.	Op
Chicago	[illegible]

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS FOR RADIO

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (U.P.)—The Blue Network announced today that it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting December 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

[illegible] Blue N[illegible]

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

[illegible]ices
[illegible]field along w[illegible]
Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama . . .

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on S[illegible]nday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

* * *

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitzky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I 'played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs'?

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 7 - 1942

SYMPHONY TO BROADCAST

Boston Orchestra Will Return to Air After Five-Year Absence

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station Blue network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. of L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by federation president, James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
DEC 8 - 1942

New York (AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION
1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] field along w[illegible] Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

[illegible] he radio.

[illegible] Petrillo [illegible] ider, Wil-
[illegible] e Carnick,
Tom [illegible] Taylor.
Marilyn [illegible] a Williams,
Elaine Steve[illegible] rida Wasson,
Margery Sikes, William Muir,
Frederick Tyers, Marilyn Saxton,
Dorothy Miller, Dorothy Fixel,
David Kane, Louise McElhaney,
First, Lola Harmes, Marian Houch,
Andrews, Ray Crispen, Flora Jean
9th Grade: Walter Aaron, Carol
ing 57 names, it is:
meeter is announced by authorities
six-weeks period of the first seat Meadville High School. Contain-

The honor roll for the second

During Second Period.

Fifty-seven Names on Roster of High Ranking Students

Roll is Announced

High School Honor

[illegible] arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL

DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

...Americans in 1942 to buy
...war bonds every pay day. A
...have signed up. Can we re
...the 24 days remaining in D
...No nobler call ever ca
...America calling—calling on
...—in Africa and on Guadal
...Let's send them a New
...met the Government's qu
...of us are backing you up

NEW YORK ... Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the blue network, it was announced Sunday.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

...the radio.

...Petrillo ... Ader, Wil-
...10 a ... Carrier,
...Tom ... Taylor.
...Marilyn ... Williams,
...Elaine Steven ... rida Wasson,
...Margery Sikes, William Muir,
...Frederick Tyers, Marilyn Saxton,
...Dorothy Miller, Dorothy Fixel,
...David Kane, Louise McElhaney,
...First, Lois Harmes, Marian Hough,
...Andrews, Ray Crispen, Flora Jean
...9th Grade: Walter Aaron, Carol
...ing 57 names, it is:
...meeter is announced by authorities
...six-weeks period of the first se-
...at Meadville High School. Contain-
...The honor roll for the second

Fifty-seven Names on Roster of High Ranking Students During Second Period.

High School Honor Roll is Announced

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS

DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

DEC 8 - 1942

...ices
...field along ...
...Symphony and ...
...the New York P...

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B... network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the ... Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

...The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

[7]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony to Broadcast Again

NEW YORK, Dec. 6. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years, under a long term contfact with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network.

The Boston symphony became a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL

DEC 8 - 1942

New York —(AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS

DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama

Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year ov beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the [illegible] Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed Serge Koussevitsky at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

the radio.

[illegible] Petrillo [illegible] Carnick, Miss [illegible] Taylor, Wil-
Tom [illegible] Taylor.
10A [illegible]
Marilyn [illegible] Williams,
Elaine Steven[illegible] Wasson,
Margery Sikes, William Muir,
Frederick Tyers, Marilyn Saxton,
Dorothy Miller, Dorothy Fixel,
David Kane, Louise McElhaney,
First, Lois Harmes, Marian Hough,
Andrews, Ray Crispen, Flora Jean
9th Grade: Walter Aaron, Carol
ing 57 names, it is:
at Meadville High School. Contin-mester is announced by authorities
six-weeks period of the first se-
The honor roll for the second

Fifty-seven Names on Roster of High Ranking Students During Second Period.

High School Honor Roll is Announced

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

[illegible]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's forty-six week season over the 145 station network. The Boston Symphony became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

DEC 7 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8;15. The network is to omprise 145 stations.

The Boston symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York philharmonic.

This Clipping From
ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL

DEC 8 - 1942

New York (AP)— Contractual relations between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a Musicians' Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

America calling—calling on
—in Africa and on Guadal
Let's send them a Nev met the Government's qu
of us are backing you up

Fifty-seven Names on Roster of High Ranking Students During Second Period.

The honor roll for the second six-weeks period of the first semester is announced by authorities at Meadville High School. Containing 57 names, it is:

9th Grade: Walter Aaron, Carol Andrews, Ray Crispen [illegible]

High School Honor Roll is Announced

New York (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced Sunday.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony orchestra in America heard over a network.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

DEC 7 - 1942

This Clipping From ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS

DEC 7 - 1942

Red Barber and Connie Desmond were on hand to record the metropolitan football finale for 1942, Giants vs. Dodgers (WHN, WOR-2:20 P. M.). In the past, gridiron battles between these interborough professional foes usually found one or the other fighting for the Eastern title. Yesterday the title incentive was missing, but the bitter rivalry sufficed to give sparkle and interest to the game. Barber and Desmond, as usual, were equal to the occasion. * * *

Flash! . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, returns to the air after an absence of five years in a series of 46 weekly concerts each season over WJZ and the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, Dec. 26 at 8:15. Barred from radio because it was not affiliated with the musicians' union, it is now eligible for broadcasting because it has come into Petrillo's fold. After May 1, the Blue Network will also bring to listeners the famous "pop" concerts of the organization under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. * * *

[7]

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM

DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony and Blue Sign Long Term Contract; First Broadcast Dec. 26

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the B[illegible] network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 7:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing

[illegible] field along w[illegible] Symphony and the New York P[illegible]

speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 8:30 Tuesday night, replacing the previously listed 'suspense drama . . . Now the Blue network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

DEC 7 - 1942

The Blue Network makes new ment that Serge Koussevitzky and signed for 46 concerts a year o beginning Dec. 26. During the s will carry the pop concerts from the open-air concerts from the Esplanade and, it is hoped, the a Festival. This new coup places WJZ and the Blue in top favor with music lovers, since it now will be offering regular symphony concerts in addition to the Saturday afternoon broadcasts direct from the Metropolitan, the Met auditions and a number of light-concert programs.

All the heroes of this war are not at the front, Drew Pearson revealed last night in his WJZ news period. He read a letter from a private stationed at Daytona Beach, who hoped his plight would be brought to the attention of the War Department. For while bitter fighting rages 'round the globe this young man is doing guard duty at a WAAC dormitory. When my children grow up and ask what their daddy did during the war, he wrote, what are they going to think when I confess that I "played nursemaid to a bunch of WAACs"?

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
SIOUX FALLS, S. D.
ARGUS-LEADER
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS-HERALD
DEC 8 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM EL DORADO, ARK.
TIMES
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From MEADVILLE, PA.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From SANDUSKY, OHIO
REGISTER-STAR-NEWS
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From WELLSTON, OHIO
DAILY SENTINEL
DEC 8 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 8—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a longterm contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

Secretary of the Interior Harold J. Ickes, speaking on "The American Petroleum Problem," has been added to the CBS schedule for 9:30 tonight, replacing the previously listed Suspense drama.

Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said the the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of forty-six weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been nonunion, recently signed a Musicians Union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

Now the Blue Network indicates that any plans which would replace the Parker Family on Sunday nights with a Hollywood series by Hedda Hopper are in abeyance. The family sketch is to be continued. Miss Hopper recently concluded a series three times a week on CBS.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 19 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule a with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, whi had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue netwo in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony O chestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orch ra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

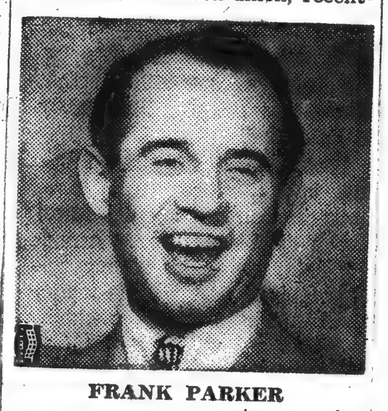
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

Boston Symphony Will Resume Broadcasting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air again after five years, on the day after Christmas, Saturday, December 26, from $8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The event will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the orchestra in its auditorium at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program will be carried by the Blue Network.

Although the Boston Symphony has not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music ... Dr.

For the LOVE of MIKE

TITLE REG U. S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please;
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
SIOUX FALLS, S. D.
ARGUS-LEADER
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
DEC 8

This Clipping From SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS-HERALD
DEC 8 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM EL DORADO, ARK.
TIMES
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From MEADVILLE, PA.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From SANDUSKY, OHIO
REGISTER-STAR-NEWS
DEC 8 1942

This Clipping From WELLSTON, OHIO ENTINEL
1942

The Bos-ra will an ab-under the nced

Harold Amer-has edule
the rama.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicianss' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 19 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule a with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, whi had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue netwo in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony chestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orch tra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

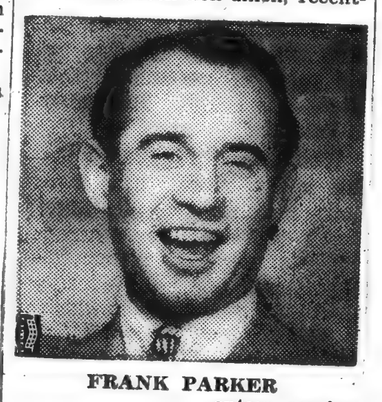
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 9 1942

Boston Symphony Will Resume Broadcasting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air again after five years, on the day after Christmas, Saturday, December 26, from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The event will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the orchestra in its auditorium at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program will be carried by the Blue Network.

Although the Boston Symphony has not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information, He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
SIOUX FALLS, S. D.
ARGUS-LEADER
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
DEC 8

This Clipping From SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS-HERALD
DEC 8 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM EL DORADO, ARK.
TIMES
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 19 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule a with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, whi had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue netwo in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony C chestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orch tra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

to the air December 26 after an absence of five years to broadcast on Blue Network. The long-term contract is unique in that it is exclusive for both signers, the net agreeing to sign no other ork and the ork in turn to appear over no other network.

The first season will be for 46 weeks, including the Pop and open air concerts, also possibly the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Lenox, Mass. The orchestra's return to the air was made possible by its recently joining the Musicians Union. The signing places the Blue in the field with NBC and its NBC Symphony and CBS, which carries the N. Y. Philharmonic.

SMONK

ANTIC AV. 818—2, 3 rooms and ... Atlantic Realty Co. Dial 4-1261.
ANTIC AV. 620—2, 3 rooms and bath, ... hot water; $16.00, $26.50. Stanley ...
ANTIC AV. 1634—3 rooms, bath, city ... $30. Apply Adriano, 1012 Atlantic.
ANTIC. 1218 — 2 and 3 rooms, bath, ... hot water, refrigeration, $45, $65. Stanley ... Atlantic Realty Co. Dial 4-1261.
ANTIC. 3801—4 rooms, bath, heat, ... hot water, refrigeration, $45, $65. Stanley Atlantic Realty Co. Dial 4-1261.
ANTIC. 401—7 rooms, 2 baths, heat, ... hot water, refrigeration, $75. Stanley Atlantic Realty Co. Dial 4-1261.

74—Apartments Unfurnished

REAL ESTATE FOR RENT

... rooms, $4; also housekeeping rooms, $2.50.
NTRAL AVENUE, S., 28 — Basement, 2 warm ... electric, $25, $2.50. 144 Westminster av.

69—Rooms For Housekeeping

NTRAL—Warm rooms, running water, ... Dial 4-4774.
TATES, 124—Rooms, with private, semi-private baths; reasonable. Dial 4-4774.
NTRAL—Warm, clean rooms, running water, phone, $3 up. Thiel's, 21 Baxter.

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

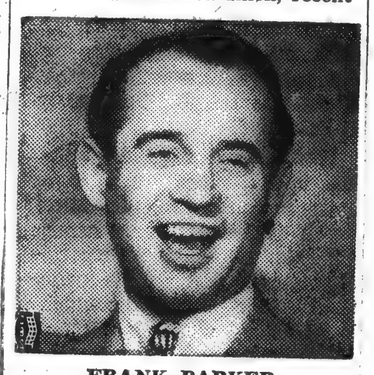
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

Boston Symphony Will Resume Broadcasting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air again after five years, on the day after Christmas, Saturday, December 26, from $8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The event will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the orchestra in its auditorium at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program will be carried by the Blue Network.

Although the Boston Symphony has not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 8 - 1942

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
1942

...week end to provide for a
...allocation of the nation's
...velt took long-delayed
...ate Than Never.
...ader has referred.
...that "ultimate bankruptcy"
...tinue to reign supreme—
...t is done, the social poli-
...erve our American way of
...dard of living for the coun-
...commerce to show the way
...cialists and their colleagues
...le ideas to bite into. It re-
...nservative viewpoint, some
...s are the foremost propo-
...as given American industry,
...he tyranny of wealth."
...ny of government as they
...reaucratic minds. They will
...ute to the coddling of the
...of possession. They do not ...want to possess and enjoy
...They have pride in what

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

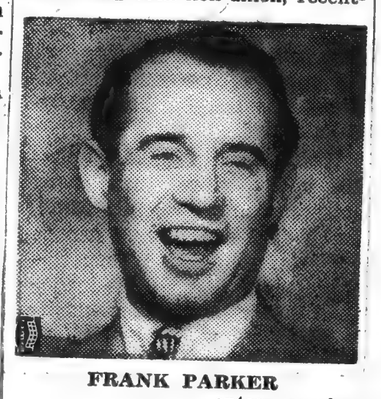
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 19 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule a with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, whi had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue netwo in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony C chestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orch tra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

Boston Symphony Will Resume Broadcasting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air again after five years, on the day after Christmas, Saturday, December 26, from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The event will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the orchestra in its auditorium at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program will be carried by the Blue Network.

Although the Boston Symphony has not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

(Eastern War Time)

NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

dose but they don't like its taste.
Most fertile subjects of hotel lobby cussing at the convention were stories of industrialists' run-ins with Washington red tape and bumbling bureaucrats. A year or two ago many economic blue printers were toying with the idea of a mildly collectivist state. Now the management class wants an amendment to the Atlantic Charter—freedom from government back sea driving after the armistice.

Curiously, the assembly met a the moment Beveridge was offer ing his welfare vision to Britair
Canada's prime minister was pro claiming that social security is th key to peace and rumors were buz zing that President Roosevelt about to flash a Utopian schem that will surpass the London dream

Current reaction among th manufacturers is not the hard boiled "let 'em eat cake" attitud of the old-fashioned skinflint
Many of the factory bosses wer poor boys who made good. The are merely sus[illegible]ous that whe
Santa Claus's [illegible]rs are hund or Uncle Sam t[illegible]n purpose of the act will boo[illegible]alism and bank free enterprise and the competitive system.

Most of the leaders believe that [illegible] medicine and other week end to provide for a allocation of the nation's

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic. 1-2

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

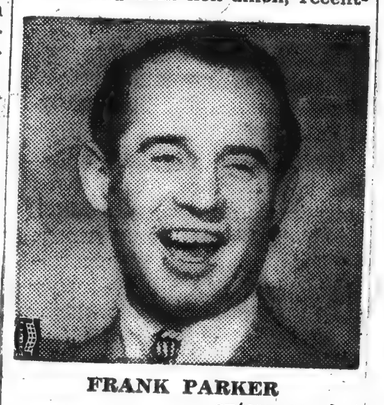
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 19 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule a with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, whi had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue netwo in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony O hestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orch ra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra. 2-

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was on announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part of the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS which carries philharmonic.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

Boston Symphony Will Resume Broadcasting

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air again after five years, on the day after Christmas, Saturday, December 26, from $8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The event will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the orchestra in its auditorium at Symphony Hall, Boston. The program will be carried by the Blue Network.

Although the Boston Symphony has not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the [illegible] Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

Broadcast Highlights

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[illegible]

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been on the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be in charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony Orchestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was on announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part of the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS which carries philharmonic.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

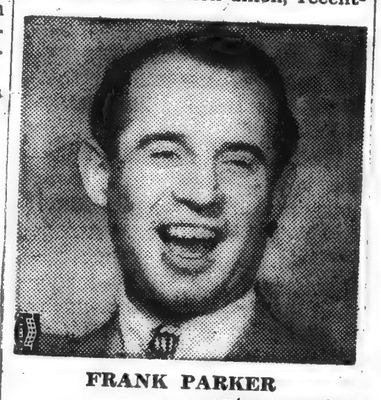
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

ymphony Will Broadcasting

hony Orchestra, ge Koussevitzky, e air again after e day after Christ- December 26, from p. m.

t will inaugurate regu- sts of the Saturday eve- certs of the orchestra in torium at Symphony Hall, . The program will be carried e Blue Network.

lthough the Boston Symphony as not been "aired" for five years, t was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

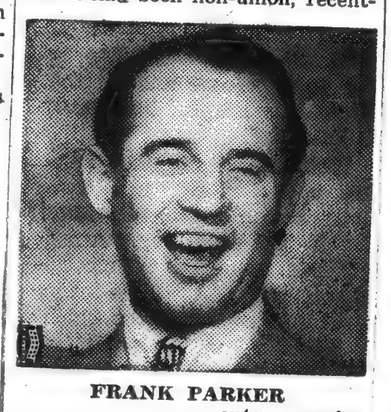
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Secretary Harold L. Ickes on CBS at 9:30 Tonight.

By C. E. BUTTERFIELD

NEW YORK, (AP) — Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the Blue in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been on the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be in charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony Orchestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

ymphony Will roadcasting

...hony Orchestra, ...ge Koussevitzky, ...e air again after ...e day after Christ-..., December 26, from ...p. m.

...t will inaugurate regu-...sts of the Saturday eve-...certs of the orchestra in ...torium at Symphony Hall, ... The program will be carried ...e Blue Network.

...lthough the Boston Symphony ...s not been "aired" for five years, ...t was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

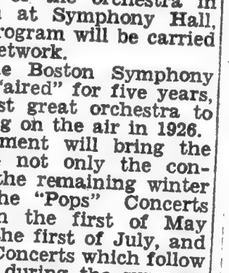
Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]



For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

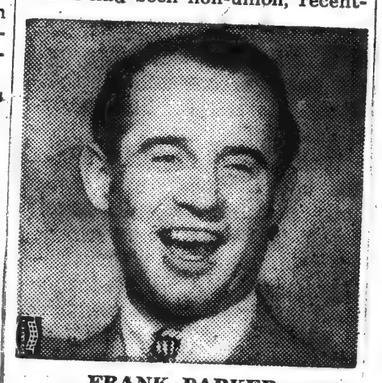
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been on the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be in charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony Orchestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

...mphony Will ...Broadcasting

...hony Orchestra, ...ge Koussevitzky, ...e air again after ...e day after Christ..., December 26, from ...p. m.

...t will inaugurate regu...asts of the Saturday eve...certs of the orchestra in ...torium at Symphony Hall, ...l. The program will be carried ...e Blue Network.

...lthough the Boston Symphony ...as not been "aired" for five years, ...t was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

This Clipping From THE ADVENTURES

...beach. At seven o'clock, Carlos, still talking, stopped at the Del Monte Lodge. "We eat here," he said brusquely. "I want to go into the monkey room—may give me inspiration for that last scene."

The monkey room, a place of red leather chairs, the wall covered with a multitude of monkeys in every conceivable endeavor—having tea—playing golf—dancing, amused Rita. They had a gay dinner and ate leisurely, though Carlos kept the waiters running desperately. Then they were on their way again, winding along the beautiful ocean road past the mansions of Pebble Beach, and at last into the sleepy little colony of Carmel.

Rita found she was to stay at the Carmel Inn only when Carlos stopped the car before the small, artistic hotel and directed the bellhop to take her bags to 210. He went with her to the desk, delivered her the key of the room and told her to sleep fast.

...Boston Symphony Orchestra and the BLU network has been completed for a long period. For the most part, the program will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitsky.

...appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered b, the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

...conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
...- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

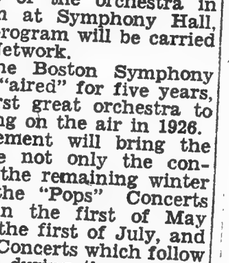
Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942



For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

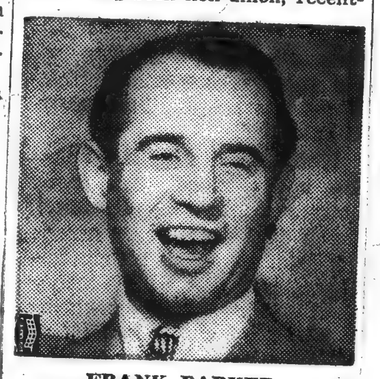
While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

Programs

Central War Time

New York, Dec. 8.—(AP)—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Blue network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other Symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been on the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be in charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony Orchestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

ymphony Will Broadcasting

...hony Orchestra, ...ge Koussevitzky, ...e air again after ...e day after Christ..., December 26, from ...p. m.

...t will inaugurate regu...sts of the Saturday eve...certs of the orchestra in ...torium at Symphony Hall, ... The program will be carried ...e Blue Network.

...lthough the Boston Symphony ...s not been "aired" for five years, it was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

◇ ◇ ◇

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◇ ◇ ◇

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractural agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
DEC 9 - 1942

RadiOpinions

By FRANCE RAINE
RADIO EDITOR

Non-union for several years, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently signed an agreement with the Petrillo organization, and is preparing a series of broadcasts for Blue network listeners. Over a long-term period, the orchestra-network pact will be exclusive in nature. The Blue will sign no other symphony orchestra, and the orchestra, in turn, will play for no other net.

The season opens Dec. 26, and the orchestra will play for an hour beginning at 8:15 p. m., each Saturday night. The network will serve 145 stations. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, will be in charge of the programs.

With this contract, the Blue enters the symphony field along with NBC and the NBC Symphony, and CBS which broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 9 - 1942

The Blue network has just completed a long-term contract with the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is said to be exclusive for both parties. The network has agreed to sign no other symphony orchestra, and the Boston ensemble in turn will be heard over no other radio facilities. It is understood that the contract is for three seasons.

The first radio season of the Boston Symphony, a minimum of 46 weeks, will open on December 26. The orchestra will play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15 o'clock. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then has been on the air both under regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. It has not been on the networks, however, for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, for the most part will be in charge of the programs. This new contract places the Blue network in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC Symphony Orchestra, the CBS with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and Mutual with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
- 1942

A treat is in store for radio fans, who love classical music, in the arrangements for broadcasting the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which arrangements are now said to have been completed.

This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
WIS. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 9-1942

◆ ◆ ◆

MISCELLANY: One of Madison radio's outstanding weekly broadcasts is the presentation of Mozart and Haydn quartets by the Pro Arte quartet, with Prof. Carl Bricken, director of the university music school, discussing them. The program is broadcast at 3:30 p. m. Thursdays by WHA.

RADIO

Bing Crosby will visit Lionel Barrymore's "The Mayor of the Town" show next Wednesday night.

Olsen and Johnson, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Roland Young, and Lew Lehr will guestar on the Caravan hour Friday night.

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin a radio series, first in many years, on Dec. 26.

◆ ◆ ◆

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
OREGONIAN
DEC 9-1942

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 9 1942

Radio Asides:

Blue, Boston Symphony in Exclusive Deal

NEW YORK, Dec. 8 (AP).—Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Blue Network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens December 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

The Boston Symphony made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both under a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions. However, it had not been on the networks for the past five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The signing places the BLU in the symphony field along with NBC and its NBC symphony and CBS, which carries the New York Philharmonic.

This Clipping From
LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION SUN JOURNAL
DEC 10 1942

Broadcast Highlights

Contractual agreement between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and BLU network, just completed for a long-term period, is reported exclusive for both signers.

That is, the network agrees to sign no other symphony orchestra, while the orchestra in turn is to appear over no other radio facilities. While the length of time covered by the contract was not announced, it was understood to be for three seasons.

The first season, which opens Dec. 26, will be for a minimum of 46 weeks, the orchestra to play for an hour each Saturday night beginning at 8:15. The network is to comprise 145 stations.

[8]

This Clipping From AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
DEC 9 - 1942

AROUND THE DIAL

Boston Symphony To Air Concerts On Blue Network

By DOROTHY DORAN
Beacon Journal Radio Editor

HIGHBROW MUSIC: A contract just signed by the Blue network and the Boston symphony orchestra places this network in the symphony field along with NBC and its symphony and CBS which carries the New York Philharmonic.

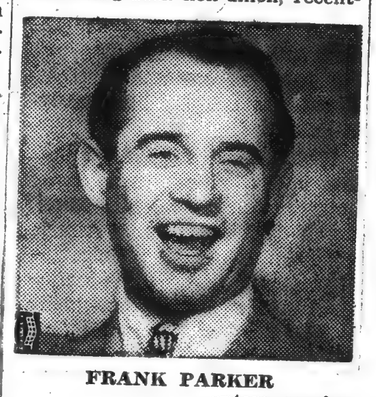
The contract is for a long-term period and is exclusive for both signers. The network will carry no other symphony organizations and the Boston symphony will appear over no other network.

While the length of time covered in the contract is not announced, it is understood to be for three seasons.

The season on the Blue will open Dec. 26, for a minimum of 46 weeks. The orchestra will play an hour concert every Saturday night starting at 8:15, and the broadcast will be carried locally over WAKR.

The Boston symphony, one of the finest in the country made its first broadcast in 1926 and since then had been on the air both on a regular schedule and with occasional concerts on numerous occasions.

The Boston outfit, however, has not been on the networks for the last five years. The orchestra, which had been non-union, recently signed a musicians' union agreement.



FRANK PARKER
.....enters service

For the most part the programs will be in charge of the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
DEC 10 1942

ymphony Will Broadcasting

hony Orchestra, ge Koussevitzky, e air again after e day after Christ- December 26, from p. m.

t will inaugurate regu- sts of the Saturday eve- certs of the orchestra in torium at Symphony Hall, . The program will be carried e Blue Network.

lthough the Boston Symphony as not been "aired" for five years, t was the first great orchestra to broadcast, going on the air in 1926.

The arrangement will bring the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season, but the "Pops" Concerts which begin in the first of May and run until the first of July, and the Esplanade Concerts which follow for four weeks during the summer. The "Pops" and Esplanade programs are conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
DEC 11 1942

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for years has remained the only major non-union orchestra in the country, has broken the deadlock, for very obvious reasons, and has joined the Musicians' Union. The income derived from recordings and radio programs will enable the orchestra management and the musical patrons of Boston to reduce the deficit that has been a yearly "bugbear." There have been concessions on both sides, and we may look forward to hearing future concerts of the Boston Symphony with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky (the conductor of the orchestra for the last nineteen years) on the air.

* * *

The Committee on Music and Drama

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
DEC 11 1942

For the LOVE of MiKE

TITLE REG U S. PATENT OFFICE

By BEN KAPLAN

John Kieran, bright and erudite,
Who romps along with ease
As sparkling kilocycle knight
On Information Please,
Was tardy for a luncheon date
In Boston and explained
That all the time that he was late
More knowledge he had gained.

* * *

Praise the men who pass the erudition. They marched into Boston last Thursday morning and by the time they marched out late Friday night they had been the means of a $4,036,000 sale of War Bonds. And Boston's Symphony Hall was packed Friday night with people who had bought anywhere from a $50 to a $5000 War Bond to see, as well as hear Information Please.

Busiest man in Boston Thursday and Friday was John Kieran. He reached town Thursday at 7:30 a. m., but nobody saw him until a few minutes before he was due at a club luncheon. In the meantime Clifton Fadiman paced a Ritz Carlton room wondering what had happened to the missing member of his board of experts. He sighed with relief when Kieran finally walked in and asked nonchalantly: "Anyone looking for me?"

* * *

Later I found out what had delayed Kieran and why he is such a veritable storehouse of information. He had been over at the Gardner Museum. This was his first visit to that historic landmark of Boston, and he was visibly impressed with a beautiful display of chrysanthemums there. He also visited the Boston Art Museum and dropped over to the burying ground where Benjamin Franklin's father is buried.

Bostonians in Symphony Hall followed closely the questions and answers that went out on the air during the actual broadcast. They were most proud, of course, of their Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. But they were visibly amazed with the general intelligence displayed at the experts' table and Fadiman's handling of every situation. If Boston is any criterion, Information Please will amass a huge total of War Bond sales during its visits in various cities for the Treasury Department.

* * *

INSIDE THE AIRSIDE . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has been signed for a series of concerts starting Dec. 26 by the Blue network . . . The arrangement was made possible when the orchestra signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians . . . Radio bandleader Meredith Wilson has left broadcasting to join the Army Special Services . . . Abbott & Costello's sponsor is anxious to move the program into the Thursday spot vacated by Rudy Vallee when the crooner changes his time next month . . . Wendell Willkie, Quentin Reynolds, authoress Jan Struther and numerous other names will guest on the Kate Smith program starting early next year . . . As the result of a special ruling handed down by the U. S. Treasury Department, Screen Guild players and Stage Door Canteen may be the only commercial programs to feature major film names on the air in 1943 . . . Mr. and Mrs. North, as predicted here recently, replaces Thin Man on NBC Dec. 30.

* * *

Andre Kostelanetz started something when he included square dance music and a "figure caller" from rural Vermont on a recent program. George Bedell, the "caller," is now featured at a NYC night club with a square dance band from his home town of Fairlee, Vt.

* * *

On Kent Juries For First Time

DOVER, Dec. 8—(Special.)—For the first time in the history of the Kent County courts, women will be on the jury panels for the February and future terms.

Jury Commissioners Walker L. Mitchin and Wilbur E. Jacobs have decided to include women on the jury panels because of the manpower shortage due to military service or essential war work in industry or in agriculture.

Mr. Mitchin, announcing the change in the policy today said

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles [illegible] Esplanade, which follow [illegible]ZET announcement said it w[illegible]at there would be a re[illegible] broadcasting of the [illegible] Symphonic Festival at [illegible]ood Music Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music centre last June.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

Pioneering in Broadcasting.

The Boston Symphony, Mr. Woods said, was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, first being heard in 1926. It first began making recordings in 1917. Mr. Petrillo barred all union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of musicians. The case is now in the courts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, it was said, will cover several seasons, rather than, as is customary with contracts with such orchestras, just one season.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

DIO SIDELIGHTS
ick L. Rushton

off the air for five years, may re- year's end . . . Morgan Beatty. as been assigned to NBC's London of the network's er Beatty's post tations sponsored ot announcements for the Govern- months . . . Vic- to the Bing Crosby . . . A Christmas nen in the service, vill feature Don and Costello, Bette Daley and the Don is that Kay Kyser y as a private.

KYSER

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy[illegible] Will Begi[illegible] On KXO[illegible]

FORTY-SIX wee[illegible] concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will [illegible]

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

Fie Na cor alo
ang
[illegible]estra, Kous-
the air ears to network,
the Blue ced yes-

be heard
NT, over Decemique af-
he great and a lization.
rchestra rchestra
it con-
he mass
It was y orch-
rst re-Millions
s have is un-

radio of the ts long
ar. The ll orig-
he or-n Bose regu-
le net-audi-
under ly and Char-
follow. permit rkshire ewood,

Henry
Sym-gh its to the by its music hcom-

Th[illegible] ward lover Symp series
Dec. 2
until certs Kousse fans ar group
It was chestra cast con by mass

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

der Arthur Fiedler until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles [illegible] Esplanade, which follow[illegible] announcement said it w[illegible] would be a re[illegible] broadcasting of the [illegible] Symphonic Festival at [illegible] Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music centre last June.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

Pioneering in Broadcasting.

The Boston Symphony, Mr. Woods said, was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, first being heard in 1926. It first began making recordings in 1917. Mr. Petrillo barred all union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of musicians. The case is now in the courts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, it was said, will cover several seasons, rather than, as is customary with contracts with such orchestras, just one season.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue network, Mark Woods, president of the network company has announced.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p. m. over 145 stations on Saturday, Dec. 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras weeks following it, and the open-air concerts which follow for about four weeks more. Arthur Fiedler directs both the latter series.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry L. Higgenson, who spent a fortune building it up to a prominent position among the orchestras of the new world.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

Fie Na
cor alo ang estra, Kous-
the air years to network,
the Blue
ced yes-

be heard
WT, over Decemique af-
he great and a ization.
rchestra
rchestra
it con-
he mass
It was y orch-irst re-Millions
s have is un-

radio of the ts long
ar. The ll orig-
he or-n Bose regu-e nett audi-
under ly and Char-follow. permit rkshire lewood,

Henry
Sym-gh its to the by its music thcom-

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy[illegible] Will Begi[illegible] On KXO[illegible]

FORTY-SIX wee[illegible] concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue [illegible] nic Festival ... Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music centre last June.

[9]

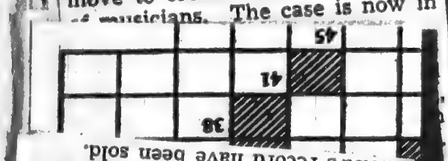
The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

Pioneering in Broadcasting.

The Boston Symphony, Mr. Woods said, was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, first being heard in 1926. It first began making recordings in 1917. Mr. Petrillo barred all union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment of musicians. The case is now in



of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's record have been sold.

After 5 Years O

One of America's major symphonic aggregations returns to the air after five years absence on the day after Christmas. On that day the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a new series of regular Saturday night broadcasts, to be heard from 8.15 p.m. to 9.15 over the Blue network. CFCF carries it locally.

The arrangement between the Bostony Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network is an unusual one, it is reported. It will bring to the radio audience not only the remaining concerts of the season, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, but also the Pop concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for ten weeks following it, and the open-air concerts which follow for about four weeks more. Arthur Fiedler directs both the latter series.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry L. Higgenson, who spent a fortune building it up to a prominent position among the orchestras of the new world.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy... Will Begi... On KXO...

FORTY-SIX wee... concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net ...

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

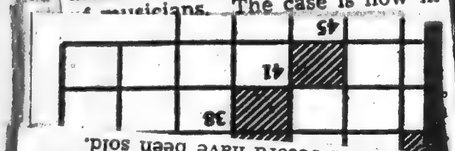
[9]

nic Festival ... Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music centre last June.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

Pioneering in Broadcasting.

The Boston Symphony, Mr. Woods said, was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, first being heard in 1926. It first began making recordings in 1917. Mr. Petrillo barred all union orchestras, symphony and popular, from making records last Aug. 1 in a move to create more employment ... musicians. The case is now in



of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal broadcasting concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

...y Returns to Air After 5 Years on December 26

One of America's major symphonic aggregations returns to the air after five years absence on the day after Christmas. On that day the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a new series of regular Saturday night broadcasts, to be heard from 8.15 p.m. to 9.15 over the Blue network. CFCF carries it locally.

The arrangement between the Bostony Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network is an unusual one, it is reported. It will bring to the radio audience not only the remaining concerts of the season, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, but also the Pop concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for ten weeks following it, and the open-air concerts which follow for about four weeks more. Arthur Fiedler directs both the latter series.

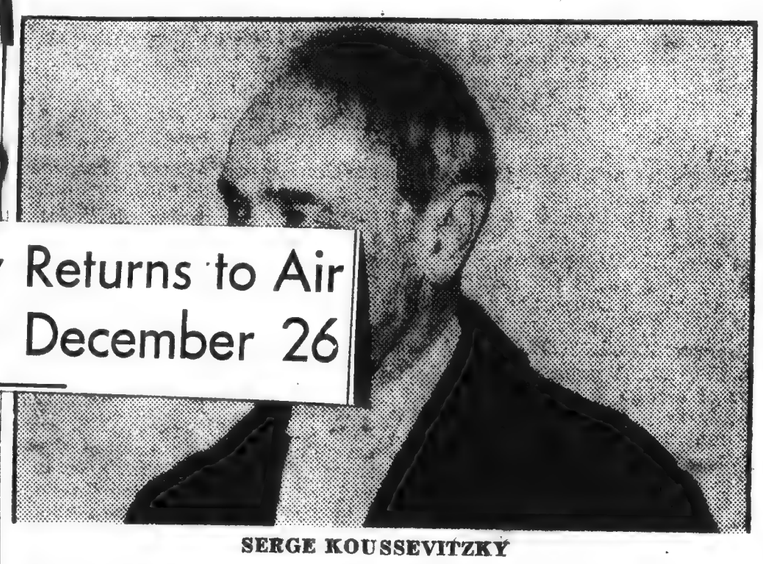
The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by Major Henry L. Higgenson, who spent a fortune building it up to a prominent position among the orchestras of the new world.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the Nation... Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy... Will Begi... On KXO...

FORTY-SIX wee... concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will ...

This Clipping From
MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 1... 194...

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The Blue network WSUN now moves into top position among music lovers by booking the nation's most popular musical organization, the Boston symphony. Koussevitsky, who will conduct the series is considered by many to be America's greatest conductor. The Boston symphony series starts Dec. 26 (Saturday) 8:15-9:15 p. m. and will continue until May.

With the acquisition of the Boston symphony the Blue network and WSUN rounds out a schedule of musical presentations including the broadcasts of the Metropolitan opera, the Metropolitan opera auditions, and the forthcoming symphony concerts.

later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other in this country except for a guest appearance last season.)

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy... Will Begi... On KXO...

FORTY-SIX wee... concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will...

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/12/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TH NO
RE AND THE TOR
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, Dec. 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its aditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston, the first time on the air in five years. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15 o'clock. Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Major Henry L. Higginson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitzky, once a famous virtuoso of the double bass, later a pioneering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra which he has made his own (he has never conducted any other in this country except for a guest appearance last season.)

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy... Will Begi... On KXO...

FORTY-SIX we... concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer, the Blue net will...

[9]

Third Sunday in Advent

St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Rev. Walter E. Howe, pastor — Holy Communion at 7:30.

Church School at 10.

Morning prayer and Litany at 11.

Meeting St. Martha's Guild, Monday night at 8.

Christian Science

First Church of Christ, Scientist, Sunday school at 9:45 a. m. Service at

ON TH

RE AND THE TO

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

Sergei Koussevitsky

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Sergei Koussevitsky, will play a series of forty-six concerts over 145 stations of the Blue Chain, starting December 26. During the summer pop concerts will be heard from Symphony Hall and open air concerts will come from the Charles River Esplanade. In addition, the series will include the annual Berkshire Sergei Koussevitsky Festival.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
DEC 13 1942

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the Nation... Broadcasting Company and ... a financial relative of that ... poration despite a recent le... separation, will pay handsoma... for broadcasts beginning Dec... ber 26 and continuing for t... balance of the winter and su... mer seasons, including the Ber... shire Festival programs, if the... can be continued.

The broadcasts will be hear... in Washington between 8:15 an... 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Sta... tion WMAL each Saturday and... by the nation at large over 144... stations of the chain. The broad... casts were announced by Mark... Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, and WHMA, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Sy... Will Begi... On KXO...

FORTY-SIX wee... concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue ...

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 1 2 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Symphony Will Begin Series On KXOK Dec. 26

FORTY-SIX weekly concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on the Blue net from 7:15 to 8:15 Saturday nights, beginning Dec. 26. It is announced that KXOK will carry the series.

Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, will direct most of these broadcasts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

Boston Symphony Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, nder its conductor, Serge Koussey, will return to the air after sence of five years to broadr the Blue Network, and Mark Woods, president of Network, announced to-adcast, to be heard on Saturday, Durates a unique e of the great and a major

Orchesorchesconass

Fred Harman

reat ortunjoy of large.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 1 2 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts, un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

DEC 13 1942

The Blue network moves toward top position with music lovers by booking the Boston Symphony, scheduled to start a series of radio broadcasts on Dec. 26 at 8:15 p.m., to continue until May. The hour-long concerts will be conducted by Koussevitzky. Long-time radio fans are glad to see the Boston group coming back on the air. It was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being heard first by mass radio audience in 1926.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

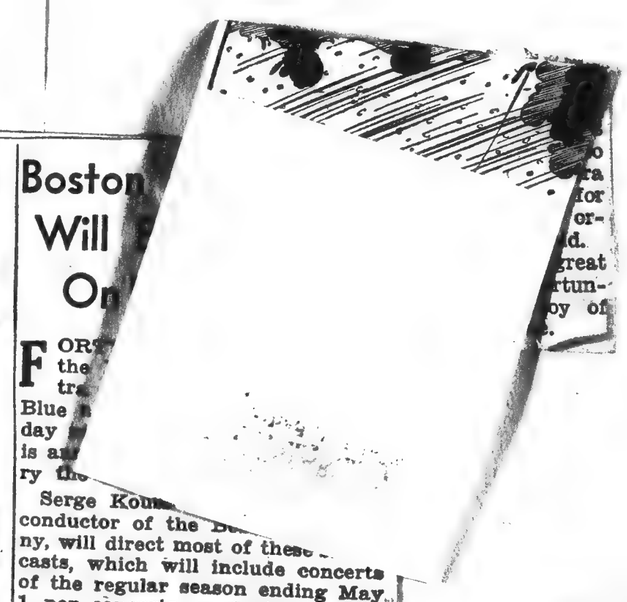
BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.



Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 1 2 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts, un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue network, Mark Woods, president of the network company, announced today.

The first weekly broadcast will be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p. m. (Kansas City time) over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26.

The Boston orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording in 1917.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston Will ... On

FORT... the ... tra... Blue ... day ... is a... ry the...

Serge Kou... conductor of the Bo... ny, will direct most of these ... casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue ...

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 1 1 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From

Fie
Na
cor alo
ang

Kous-
the air ears to network,
the Blue
ed yes-

be heard
VT, over Decemlque af-he great and a lization.
rchestra
rchestra
it con-
he mass
It was y orch-
rst re-Millions
s have is un-

radio of the ts long
ar. The l orig-
he or-n Bos-regu-
e net-audi-under ly and Char-follow. permit rkshire ewood,

Henry
Sym-gh its to the by its music hcom-

319 ALAMEDA SWEDEN
Open F White, blue and phony, off for five years because of union difficulties, is due to return for the season on the Blue, Dec. 26, an hour each Saturday night, 7:15.

from 8:15 to 9:15.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Serge Koussevitzky, but the Pop concerts, which will be given at Symphony hall for an expected season of 10 weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FOR
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA
NONPAREIL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From SIOUX CITY, IOWA
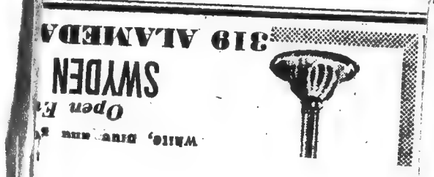
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From



Fie
Na
cor alo ang Kous-
the air ears to network,
the Blue
ed yes-
e heard
VT, over Decem-que af-
e great and a ization.
chestra
chestra cone mass t was orcht reillions have unadio
the long
The rigor-Bosegu-
netudi-nder and Charllow.
ermit shire wood,
Henry
Sym-its the its nusic com-

are highlights for this coming week.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, will return to the air after an absence of five years, to broadcast over the Blue Network, starting Saturday night, December 26, at 7:15 o'clock (WSIX). The majority of the concerts will originate in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's own auditorium in Boston.

Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Serge Koussevitzky, but the Pop concerts, which will be given at Symphony, hall for an expected season of 10 weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

for ord.
great rtunoy of e.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 1 2 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

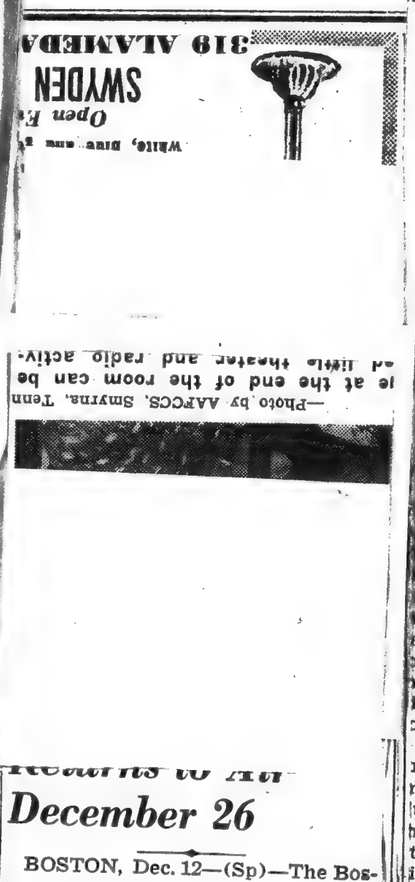
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS

DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA



—Photo by AAFCCS, Smyrna, Tenn.

December 26

BOSTON, Dec. 12—(Sp)—The Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphany hall, Boston.

The Boston Symphony orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Serge Koussevitzky, but the Pop concerts, which will be given at Symphony hall for an expected season of 10 weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

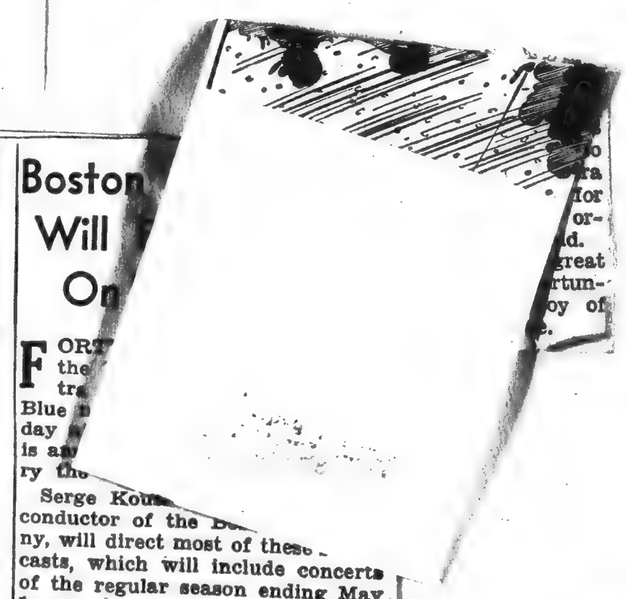
BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.



Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

The Boston Symphony will return to the air on Dec. 26, after an absence of five years. A contract has been signed with the Blue Network for a series to be broadcast weekly during the symphony season over 145 stations.

The majority of the concerts will originate from the Symphony Hall in Boston. Beginning in May, it is planned to carry the "Pop" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade. The orchestra became the last major symphony to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians when it signed an agreement early this month.

ment between the ... and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining Winter season under Koussevitsky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Syhphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FOR
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue ...

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

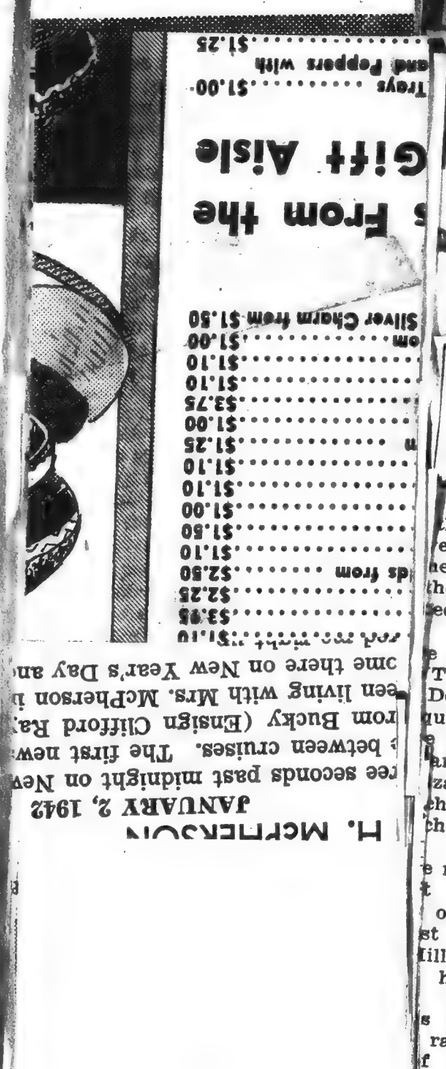
WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.



H. MCPHERSON
JANUARY 2, 1942

Will Broadcast

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, Dec. 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining Winter season under Koussevitsky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Syhphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FOR
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FOR
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

[9]

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over KSCJ, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network company, announced.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p. m. over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, will inaugurate a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

This outstanding program will be broadcast exclusively in this area by Station WGH.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held
this summer the Blue

after an absence of five years, will return to the air December 26. Last week this symphony became a member of the American Federation of Musicians, according to an announcement made by Federation President James C. Petrillo. The Boston orchestra, whose director is Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, is the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become unionized.

coast-to-coast over Station
WGH, and 145 other Blue Network stations every Saturday night starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The program time will be from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The return of the Boston Symphony is heralded as a great event. This was the first principal orchestra in the country to give regular broadcast concerts, presenting programs as long ago as 1926. The Boston Symphony was the first full symphony orchestra to make recordings, having made records for Victor in 1917.

The Blue Network arrangements will provide radio listeners with these thrilling hour-long weekly concerts throughout the entire Symphony season of 46 weeks each year.

This outstanding program will be broadcast exclusively in this area by Station WGH.

THE MRS. HA

Meet Mrs.
ine. She wanted no but the war demand life! Only after her were snatched from awaken to the pain
Then she emerges
"Mrs. Miniver."

STARS ON ICE
A Musical Icetravaganza
Conrad Hertz and Arthur M. Wirtz present
CENTER THEATRE, Rockefeller Center. CO. 5-5474
America's Only Ice Theatre
Eves. Incl. Sun., 8:40. Mats. Today, Wed. and Sat.
No Monday Perf. Mail Orders Filled
Sun. Nights Only, 50c to $2.50 Plus Tax

A NEW SHOW BY HOWARD LINDSAY and RUSSEL CROUSE STRIP FOR ACTION
"An Amazing Show"—VOGUE Magazine
2 PERFS. TODAY, 3 & 8:45
Eves. Incl. Sun., 8:45, $1.10 to $3.85. Mats. Today & Sat.
ATIONAL, W. 41 St. No Mon. Perf. PE. 6-8220
Seats Now for New Year's Eve. $1.65 to $6.60

IN.
PPEAL
942
GE, LA
Fie Na
cor alo ang Kous-
he air ears to letwork,
he Blue
ed yes-
e heard
'T, over Decem-que af-e great nd a zation.
hestra hestra con-mass was orcht reillions have un-
radio
the long
The orig-
or-Bosegu-
netudi-nder and harlow.
mit hire od, nry
m-its the its sic
m-

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

Static

Edward E. Edgar

Music lovers throughout the nation were thrilled when it was announced by the Blue Network that after an absence of five years the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, would again be heard in regularly scheduled broadcasts.

The Boston Symphony has not made any broadcasts during the last half-decade because of union difficulties, however, a solution to this problem has been found, and the programs will be broadcast coast-to-coast over Radio Station WGH, and 145 other Blue Network stations every Saturday night starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The program time will be from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m.

The return of the Boston Symphony is heralded as a great event. This was the first prineipal orchestra in the country to give regular broadcast concerts, presenting programs as long ago as 1926. The Boston Symphony was the first full symphony orchestra to make recordings, having made records for Victor in 1917.

The Blue Network arrangements will provide radio listeners with these thrilling hour-long weekly concerts throughout the entire Symphony season of 46 weeks each year.

This outstanding program will be broadcast exclusively in this area by Station WGH.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the Bo
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
DEC 13 1942

BATON ROUGE, LA
ADVOCATE
12/13/42

Saturday

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network company, announced yesterday.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p. m. CWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, December 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

The long term contract is unprecedented, providing the radio public with the concerts of the orchestra weekly through its long season of 46 weeks each year. The majority of the concerts will originate in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's own auditorium in Boston. At the expiration of the regular season, May 1, the Blue network will bring to its vast audience the "Pops" concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July and the open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade which follow. It is hoped conditions will permit the resumption of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcom-

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN
DEC 13 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

ing series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

gress that an appropriation of $2,500,000 be set up for establishment of similar programs for women throughout the nation.

'Guinea Pigs'

These 10 aviation "guinea pigs" constitute a de luxe personnel since there are few instructors—men or women—equipped as they are to teach all ground subjects and flying as well.

Though they are civilian pilot instructors, they have chosen uniforms as spic and snappy as any WAAC or WAVE . . . a dark brown coat, trousers of a sort of khaki-grey and an overseas cap.

Tennessee has allotted approximately $15,000 for this experiment in women instructor training, out of which the residence, subsistence, furniture, flying clothes and equipment, including three training planes, have been bought or rented.

The money came from the fund accruing to the bureau of aeronautics of the state gasoline tax, in line with legislation which Percy McDonald, chairman of the bureau, and Mrs. Omlie were instrumental in having passed in 1937. Under this law, the tax money collected on gasoline purchased for use in aircraft is used only in promotion of aeronautics.

Phoebe and the girls had considerable trouble in whipping together living quarters for themselves at the field at the start of their training in September.

They finally settled on an old

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FOR
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN

DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

Boston Organiz
To Exclusive R

Broadcasts To Start Dec. 2
Acclaim In Metro

By ROBERT

LONG after it severed officia Red network, the Blue ca Symphony Orchestra and put anyone asked for an explanati on paper. But with the seve vanced stage, officially comple carrying the orchestras of ano a long-term exclusive contract Orchestra.

This new deal stipulates that the chain will sign no other symphony orchestra while the Boston Symphony, in turn, is to appear on no other radio facilities.

The Boston Symphony, now conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, made its first broadcast in 1926, and since then has been on the air both with a regular schedule and for numerous individual occasions. However, it is returning to the air via the Blue after an absence of five years.

Among other things, the Boston Symphony was widely known for being nonunion, and it had persistently refused to unionize, despite pressure brought to bear in various ways by James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians.

An agreement recently was effected with the musicians' union.

The organization's first concert on the Blue will be Saturday night, Dec. 26, with the season to run a minimum of 46 weeks. It will broadcast each Saturday for an hour over 45 stations, and will be heard locally on WMPS.

As for symphonic orchestras, the Blue now shoots par with NBC, which has the NBC Symphony; CBS, which has the New York Philharmonic; and MBS, which airs the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Golden Meadow No. 26, 17,820 ft. W and 3,300 ft. N of SE corner of Sec. 78, in S75, T19S-R21E.

Plaquemine Parish, Grand Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s State of Louisiana No. 1058, approximately 1430 ft. N and 2250 ft. E of Station "Wash." in Sl, T20S, R26E. Grande Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s Cockrell-Moran No. 199, approximately 780 ft. N and 5500 ft. E of Station "Wash." in Sl-, T20S, R26E. Grand Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s Cockrell-Moran No. 189, approximately 1500 ft. N and 6290 ft. E of Sta-

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

For the tra
Blue
day is an ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will [9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 1 0 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry th

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts
of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the
Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will on

Golden Meadow No. 26, 17,820 ft. W and 2,300 ft. N of SE corner of Sec. 78, in S75, T19S-R21E.

Plaquemine Parish, Grand Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s State of Louisiana, No. 1058, approximately 1430 ft. N and 2250 ft. E of Station "Wash." in S1, T20S, R26E. Grande Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s Cockrell-Moran No. 199, approximately 780 ft. N and 5500 ft. E of Station "Wash." in S1-, T20S, R26E. Grand Ecaille Field—Freeport Sulphur Co.'s Cockrell-Moran No. 189, approximately 1500 ft. N and 6290 ft. E of Sta-

Even As Other M

Boston Organization Signed To Exclusive Radio Contract

Broadcasts To Start Dec. 26—Frances Greer Wins Acclaim In Metropolitan Debut

By ROBERT GRAY

LONG after it severed official connection with the NBC Red network, the Blue carried concerts of the NBC Symphony Orchestra and put tongue in cheek whenever anyone asked for an explanation that would look plausible on paper. But with the severing process now in an advanced stage, officially complete, the Blue has discontinued carrying the orchestras of another network and has signed a long-term exclusive contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This new deal stipulates that the chain will sign no other symphony orchestra while the Boston Symphony, in turn, is to appear on no other radio facilities.

The Boston Symphony, now conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, made its first broadcast in 1926, and since then has been on the air both with a regular schedule and for numerous individual occasions. However, it is returning to the air via the Blue after an absence of five years.

Among other things, the Boston Symphony was widely known for being nonunion, and it had persistently refused to unionize, despite pressure brought to bear in various ways by James C. Petrillo, head of the American Federation of Musicians.

An agreement recently was effected with the musicians' union. The organization's first concert on the Blue will be Saturday night, Dec. 26, with the season to run a minimum of 46 weeks. It will broadcast each Saturday for an hour over 45 stations, and will be heard locally on WMPS.

As for symphonic orchestras, the Blue now shoots par with NBC, which has the NBC Symphony; CBS, which has the New York Philharmonic; and MBS, which airs the Philadelphia Orchestra.

[9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
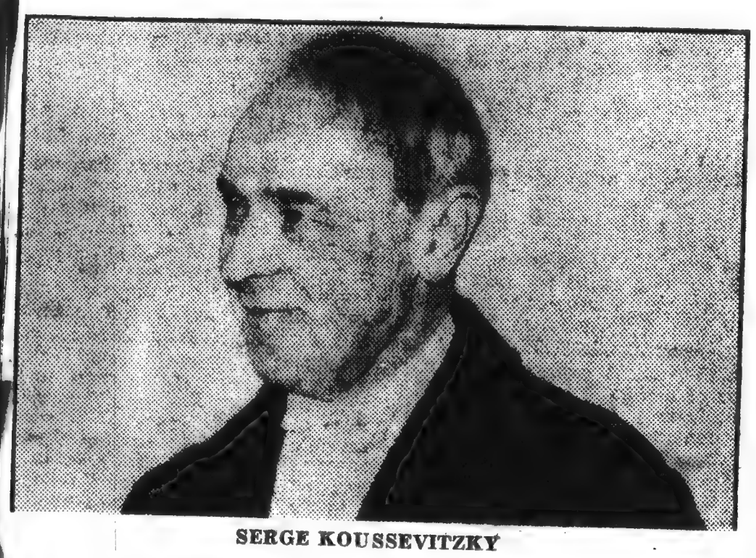
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

RADIO

NEWS AND SIDELIGHTS

By Frederick L. Rushton

BOSTON SYMPHONY, off the air for five years, may return in a new series before year's end . . . Morgan Beatty, Washington news analyst, has been assigned to NBC's London office . . . Robert St. John of the network's London office will take over Beatty's post in the capitol . . . Radio stations sponsored over a million and a half spot announcements and over 150,000 programs for the Government during the last three months . . . Victor Borge will say goodbye to the Bing Crosby show in the near future . . . A Christmas Day two-hour airing for men in the service, now being arranged, will feature Don Ameche, Bob Hope, Abbott and Costello, Bette Davis, Merry Macs, Cass Daley and the Don Cossacks . . . The story is that Kay Kyser is slated to enter the Army as a private.

KYSER

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 13 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WHICH ON DEC. 26 WILL BEGIN A SATURDAY NIGHT SERIES ON KXOK.

Boston
Will
On

FORT
the tra
Blue
day is a ry the

Serge Kou
conductor of the B
ny, will direct most of these casts, which will include concerts of the regular season ending May 1, pop concerts, conducted in May and June by Arthur Fiedler, and then open air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. If the Berkshire Music Festival is held this summer the Blue net will [9]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT
DEC 10 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN
DEC 11 1942

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony To Broadcast

From the N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced recently by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company. The first broadcast will be heard December 26 from 8.15 to 9.15 p.m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on December 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since August 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts.

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will [illegible] concerts un-

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
DEC 12 1942

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 13 1942

ADDITIONAL RADIO

Boston Symphony Begins Broadcast Series Dec. 26

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

For the first time in five years the Boston Symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will be on the air again Saturday, Dec. 26, the day after Christmas. The program will inaugurate a regular series of Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra from Symphony Hall.

The broadcasts are to be made exclusively over the Blue net work and will be aired for Rhode Island listeners by WFCI. Dialers of 144 other Blue network stations will be able to hear the broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which radio history lists as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air.

The arrangement between the orchestra and the network is an unusual one, since it will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts which will be given at Symphony Hall for a season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade also will be included, these, as well as the Pop Concerts being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
TIMES HERALD
12/13/42

Boston Symphony Group To Return to Radio Soon

The recent announcement by the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the effect that after 60 years of "rugged individualism" they finally had accepted membership in the American Federation of Musicians is explained by the further announcement that the orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air from which, as a non-union group, they had been banned for five years.

Back of both announcements is the fact of the orchestra's financial embarrassment. Death and taxes had taken toll of many loyal backers. It became necessary to earn the money thus lost. The Blue Network, once a part of the National Broadcasting Company and still a financial relative of that corporation despite a recent legal separation, will pay handsomely for broadcasts beginning December 26 and continuing for the balance of the winter and summer seasons, including the Berkshire Festival programs, if these can be continued.

The broadcasts will be heard in Washington between 8:15 and 9:15, Eastern Wartime, over Station WMAL each Saturday and by the nation at large over 144 stations of the chain. The broadcasts were announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network.

RADIO

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 15 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
NEWS
12/18/42

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 18 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
~~SUNDAY HERALD~~
DEC 1942

This Clipping From DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
DEC 20 1942

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
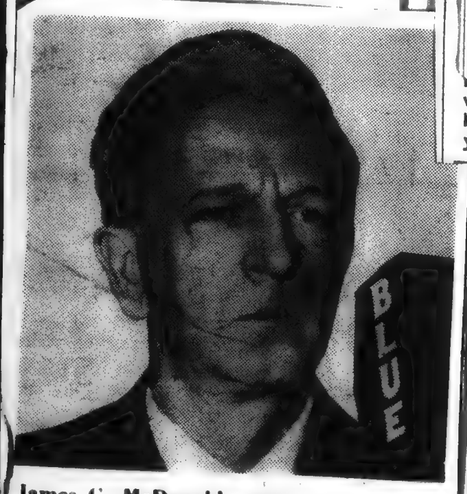
OREGON JOURNAL
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symphony Will Broadcast

The Boston Symphony orchestra, which has not been heard on the air for five years, will be on the air again beginning the day after Christmas. It will inaugurate broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts in Symphony hall, Boston. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926.

Conducting the orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its distinguished leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
DEC 21 1942



James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co., announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ..... Prokofieff

YMPHONY O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 15 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
NEWS
12/18/42

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 18 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD
DEC 1942

This Clipping From DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
DEC 20 1942

This Clipping From PORTLAND, OREGON
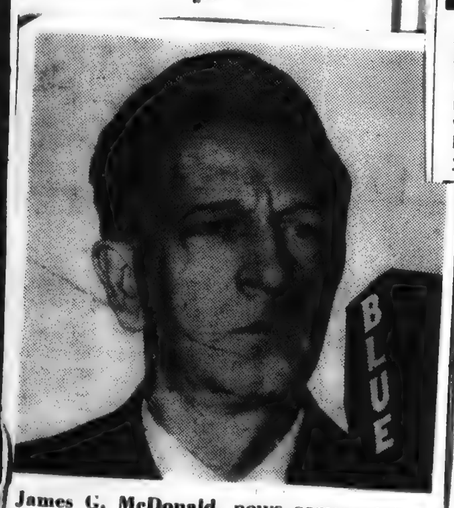
OREGON JOURNAL
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symphony Will Broadcast

The Boston Symphony orchestra, which has not been heard on the air for five years, will be on the air again beginning the day after Christmas. It will inaugurate broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts in Symphony hall, Boston. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926.

Conducting the orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its distinguished leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
DEC 21 1942



James G. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT-LEADER
DEC 20 1942

On the Air

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY is the conductor of the famed Boston Symphony orchestra which returns to the air on Saturday night at 7:15 over the Blue network. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

ny Orchestra.

the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
DEC 25 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY RETURNS TO THE AIR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air tomorrow, after an absence of five years, to broadcast over KXOK, the Blue Network.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ..... Prokofieff

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 15 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
NEWS
12/18/42

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 18 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
~~SUNDAY HERALD~~
DEC 1942

This Clipping From DAYTON, OHIO
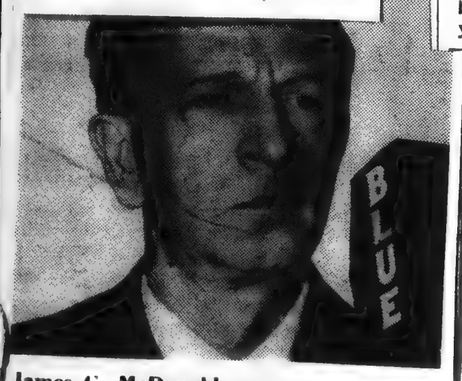
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
DEC 20 1942

Boston Orchestra On Air Again

Now that the Boston Symphony orchestra has become associated with the American Federation of Labor it is coming back to the air and back to recordings.

This great orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky will begin its broadcast series for the season Saturday evening and the concert will be sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15 o'clock by the Blue network.

Victor Records announces that the orchestra has signed a long-term contract.



James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

night at 7:15 over the Blue ... work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major [illegible] organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ..... Prokofieff

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

...MPHONY ...O THE AIR

...no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 15 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
NEWS

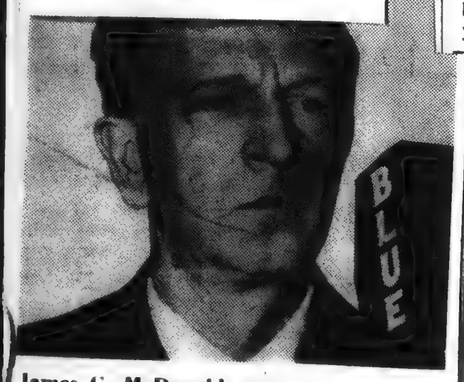
...sevitzky, has signed a new long-term contract to make Victor Red Seal recordings, as soon as the Petrillo ban is lifted. The contract also calls for the exclusive recording performances of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler as conductor.

Just 25 years ago, almost to the day, the first Victor records of the Boston Symphony were released. These discs were history-making in the phonograph art, because for the first time an orchestra of 100 men was recorded. Up to this time, the size of an orchestra for records was limited to 40 men.

The first records of the Boston Symphony, which was then directed by Dr. Karl Muck, were three single face discs. They were the Finale of the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4, on two records, and the Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin.

The first recordings of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting the Boston Symphony were also history making. Recorded in November of 1928, they were the first "orthophonic" records to be produced, and they ushered in a completely new conception of high quality sound-on-disc recording and reproduction for the home.

Since 1917 the records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have sold in the millions. With Dr. Koussevitzky as conductor, the orchestra's records attained even greater popularity. The recording of Shubert's Unfinished Symphony by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony is high on the list of all-time best sellers.



James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

●

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

...night at 7:15 over the Blue ...work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor...

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co., announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

...MPHONY
...O THE AIR

...no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

...make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony — Prokofieff

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 15 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM ENID, OKLA.
NEWS
12/18/42

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
DEC 18 1942

Boston Symphony Inaugurates New Series—The celebrated Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Keussevitzky, will inaugurate its series of broadcasts over WCBS and the coast to coast Blue network on Saturday, Dec. 26, at 7:15 p. m., with two major classics programmed. [illegible] permit, the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Anglewood in Lenox will also be aired over the Blue.

The popularity of this symphonic group has been attested by the fact that millions of their records have been purchased by music-loving America.

Edward Tomlinson, now heard at 7:15 p.m. Saturdays, will follow the symphony concerts at 8:15 CWT after December 26.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

[illegible] work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

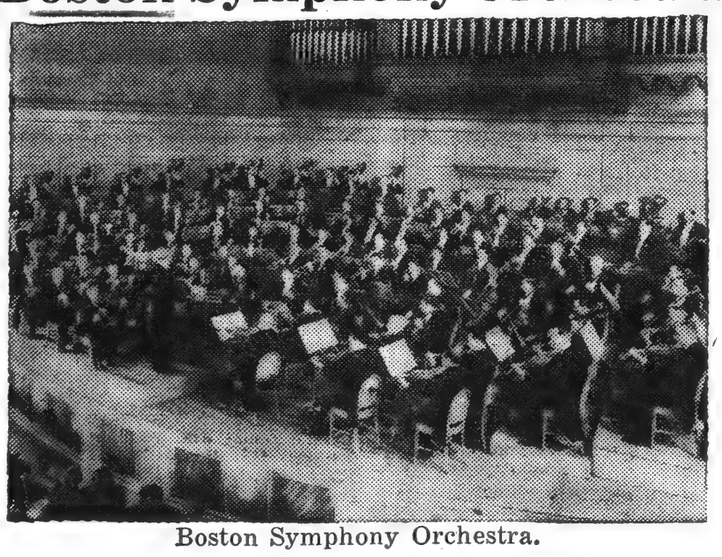
It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra



Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major [illegible] organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in [illegible] make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony Prokofieff

the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

[illegible]YMPHONY [illegible]O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
DEC 14 1942

This Clipping From
HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 14 1942

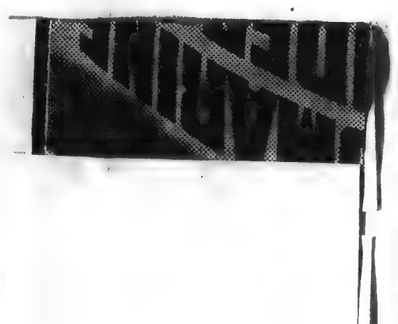
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
DEC 15 1942

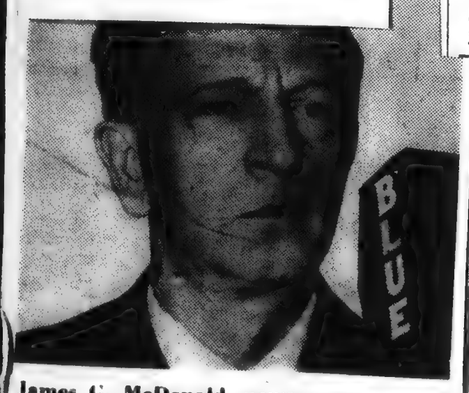
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND

top position among music lovers by booking the nation's most popular musical organization, The Boston Symphony Orchestra. Starting December 26, KCRC, and the Blue network, will present a full hour's concert each Saturday evening from 7:15 to 8:15. This series wil run through May and will be conducted by the eminent conductor Serge Koussevitzky. In May the famous "Pops" concerts under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler will be broadcast, and if conditions then permit, the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Anglewood in Lenox will also be aired over the Blue.

The popularity of this symphonic group has been attested by the fact that millions of their records have been purchased by music-loving America.

Edward Tomlinson, now heard at 7:15 p.m. Saturdays, will follow the symphony concerts at 8:15 CWT after December 26.





James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major [illegible] organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

[illegible] make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ..... Prokofieff

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

YMPHONY 'O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.

Approximately 14,000,000 men over

TWO milking Shorthorn bull calves. From good producing cows. Lakeside Farm, Jet, Oklahoma. 12-13-3

Livestock Removals 54A

15 WEANING pigs for sale. George Kruse, 9506F11. 4 miles south on 16th and Market, ½ east. 12-13-3

FOR SALE—20 weaned purebred Poland China pigs. Call 8F52, Carrier, Ernie Clause. 12-13-3

TWENTY Hereford male calves, 10 registered. B. C. Dale, Aline, Oklahoma. 12-12-3

AND WOOL CO.
223 South Second St.
HIDES—WOOL—FURS
Consignments Solicited
E. E. GREEN, Manager

Returning to Air

Orchestra, After 5-Year Absence, Will Resume Broadcasts Dec. 26.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network. The first broadcast, to be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p.m., over WISH on Saturday, Dec. 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

First Air Concert In 1926.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, be-

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

James G. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS

DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL

DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co., announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

YMPHONY 'O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.

Approximately 14,000,000 men over

Livestock Removals 54A

TWO milking Shorthorn bull calves. From good producing cows. Lakeside Farm, Jet, Oklahoma. 12-13-3

15 WEANING pigs for sale. George Kruse, 850611. 4 miles south on 16th and Market, ½ east. 12-13-3

FOR SALE—20 weaned purebred Poland China pigs. Call 8F52, Cartter. Ernie Clause. 12-13-3

TWENTY Hereford male calves, 10 registered. B. C. Dale, Aline, Oklahoma. 12-12-3

AND WOOL CO.
223 South Second St.
HIDES—WOOL—FURS
Consignments Solicited
E. E. GREEN, Manager

12-3

Returning to Air

Orchestra, After 5-Year Absence, Will Resume Broadcasts Dec. 26.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network. The first broadcast, to be heard from 7:15 to 8:15 p.m., over WISH on Saturday, Dec. 26, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

First Air Concert In 1926.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation. The long-term contract is unprecedented, providing the radio public with the concerts of the orchestra weekly through its long season of 46 weeks each year. The majority of the concerts will originate in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's own auditorium in Boston. At the expiration of the regular season, May 1, the Blue network will bring to its vast audience the "Pops" concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles river esplanade which follow. It is hoped conditions will permit the resumption of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

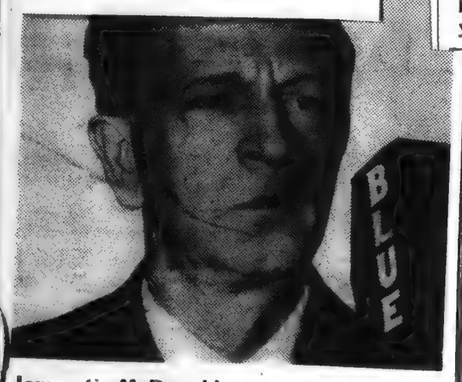
The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

[illegible] work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.



James G. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major [illegible] organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

[illegible] make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony Prokofieff

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

YMPHONY 'O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

INFORMATION OBSCURED

TWO milking Shorthorn bull calves. From good producing cows. Lakeside Farm. Jct. Oklahoma. 12-13-3

ing first heard in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation. The long-term contract is unprecedented, providing the radio public with the concerts of the orchestra weekly through its long season of 46 weeks each year. The majority of the concerts will originate in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's own auditorium in Boston. At the expiration of the regular season, May 1, the Blue network will bring to its vast audience the "Pops" concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles river esplanade which follow. It is hoped conditions will permit the resumption of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, in Lenox.

8:00—Burns and Allen, WFBM.
8:30—Murder Clinic, WIBC.
9:00—Bop Hope, WIRE.

By VIRGINIA HATFIELD

AFTER AN absence of five years from the air, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to broadcast weekly on the Blue network and WISH, beginning Saturday, Dec. 26, at 7:15 p. m.

Mr. Koussevitzky

the Boston symphony was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being heard on the radio in 1926. It also was the first full symphony orchestra to make records, in 1017. Millions of the orchestra's platters have been sold.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

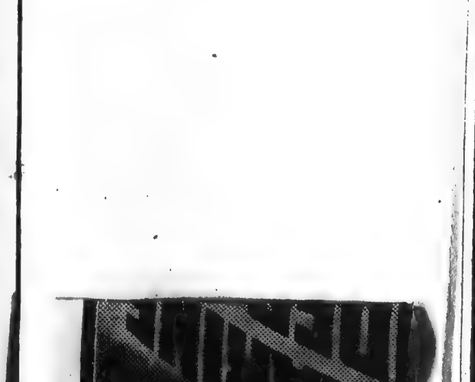
Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.



James G. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

...MPHONY
...O THE AIR

no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera barytone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ... Prokofieff

INFORMATION OBSCURED

...nter of Indianapolis

...RNER

...ton Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network is exclusive for both signers. . . . The orchestra will appear over no other radio facilities, and the network will not sign any other symphony orchestra. The contract is for a 46-week season, one hour each Saturday night beginning December 16. . . . Tenor Frank Parker has enlisted in the Merchant Marine. . . . The sponsors of We, the People will give the war effort program a Christmas gift in the nature of a renewal. . . . The program has been on the air since 1936. . . . The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir program celebrated its 700th nation-wide network broadcast December 13.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

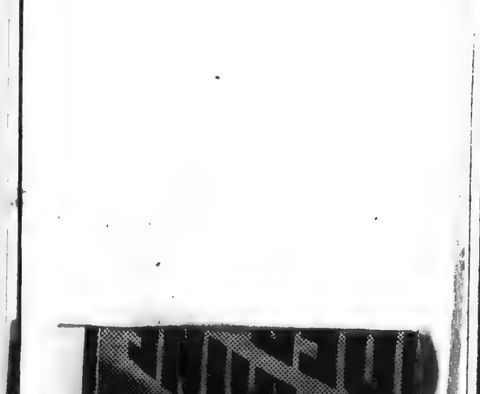
The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

...work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.



James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS

DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL

DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major ...organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in ...

...make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:

Classical Symphony ... Prokofieff

the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

...MPHONY ...O THE AIR

...no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

nter of Indianapolis

...ttack click against the hard-hit-
...once did their vaunted running
...forward wall was outplayed. Only
...Green Bay Packers—the Chicago
...941—when the Bears lost to the
...he first time since November,
...It was a battle of lines and for
...ld yesterday.
...one, Coach Ray Flaherty's club
...f ever a team went out

Symphony Orchestra and the Blue network is exclusive for both signers . . . The orchestra will appear over no other radio facilities, and the network will not sign any other symphony contract . . .

...major orchestras weekly in a series of sustaining programs.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

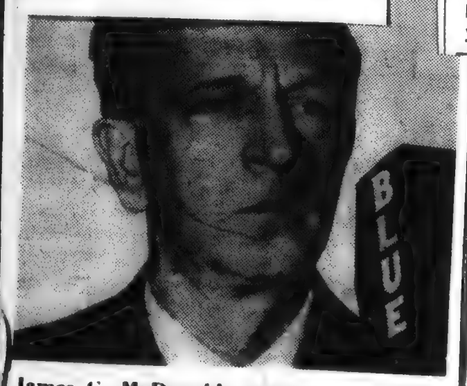
The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.

...work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.



James C. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

DEC 20 1942

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor...

THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS

DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personfication of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL

DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co,, announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major organization.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

* * *

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockoridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

...MPHONY ...O THE AIR

...no Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Ross Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

...make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold. The program:
Classical Symphony ... Prokofieff

[10]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

...ever a team went ...
...me Coach Ray Flaherty's club
...id yesterday.
It was a battle of lines and for the first time since November,
1941—when the Bears lost to the Green Bay Packers—the Chicago
forward wall was outplayed. Only once did their vaunted running attack click against the hard-hit-a 1942-43 weekly broadcast season starting Dec. 26, with hourly programs to be aired at 8:15 p. m., EWT, each Saturday night.

The orchestra, non-union for several years, recently signed a union agreement with the American Federation of Musicians. A 145-station network will carry the new music series, with the Blue now joining NBC and CBS in presenting major orchestras weekly in a series of sustaining programs.

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Boston Symph. Returns to Air December 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor will be on the air again. The day after Christmas (Saturday, December 26) will inaugurate regular broadcasts of the Saturday evening concerts of the famous orchestra in its auditorium in Symphony Hall, Boston. The Boston Symphony Orchestra has not been heard on the air for five years. Radio history lists this as the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network and sent over 145 stations from 8:15 to 9:15. The arrangement between the orchestra and the Blue Network Company is an unusual one. It will bring to the radio audience not only the concerts through the remaining winter season under Koussevitzky until May 1, but the Pop Concerts, which will be given at Symphony Hall for an expected season of ten weeks until early July. The open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will follow for about four weeks. Both of these latter series will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler.

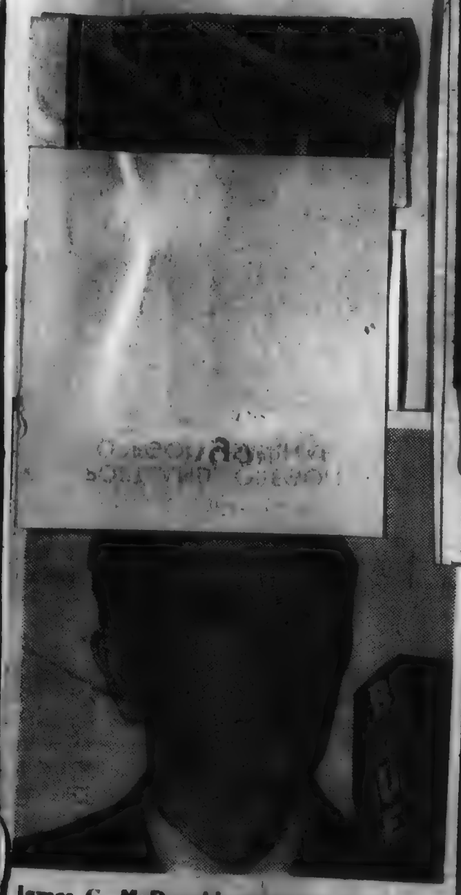
Conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1924 when he first came to America, Serge Koussevitzky, its illustrious leader, has exceeded in length the term of any previous conductor. One result of the uninterrupted application of a single great leadership has been the quality of the Boston Symphony concerts, which in beauty of tone and brilliance of performance are often described as unique.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881 by the late Maj. Henry L. Gillinson, a citizen of Boston who expended his fortune in making this the finest symphony orchestra in the New World. Conductors such as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch and Karl Muck were active in bringing this about. Serge Koussevitsky, once a famous virtuouso of the double bass, later a poineering conductor in the capitals of Europe, has found his fullest powers as conductor of the orchestra he has made his own (he has never conducted any other orchestra in this country except for a guest appearance last season). The leader's untiring energy in the bringing forward of music new and old and the eloquence of his interpretations have given the Boston Orchestra an extraordinarily wide repertoire and have kept its audiences abreast of all important movements in symphonic composition.

Miss Dorothy Short, who has recently been engaged as soloist for the Church of Divine Science, has brought distinction to musical circles of Seattle and to her instructors.

In 1941, the Cincinnati Opera Company, sponsored by the radio station, selected one singer from each of 12 districts in the United States. These 12 were sent to Cincinnati for the finals. Miss Short was chosen from this district.

From these 12 contestants four were chosen to sing with the Cincinnati Opera Company during the summer season. Again Miss Short was chosen and sang with the opera company for six weeks in such well-known operas as Faust, Hansel and Gretel, etc. She was also awarded a $1,000 1942 scholarship, which she did not accept.



James G. McDonald, news commentator, interviews Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony (WJZ-Blue, 2:30 p.m.). McDonald will be intermission commentator when the Boston Symphony is broadcast over the Blue network, starting Dec. 26 (8:15 p.m.).

[10]

This Clipping From
THIS CLIPPING FROM SHERIDAN, WYO.
PRESS
DEC 24 1942

NEW YORK DUE FOR ELECTRIC SHOCKS

Dmitri Mitropoulos In Charge of Symphony Orchestra.

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dimitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming east to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage, Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the blue network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor—it elapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 21 1942

Boston Symphony Returning to Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, it was announced by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company.

The broadcasts will be carried locally by Station WNBC.

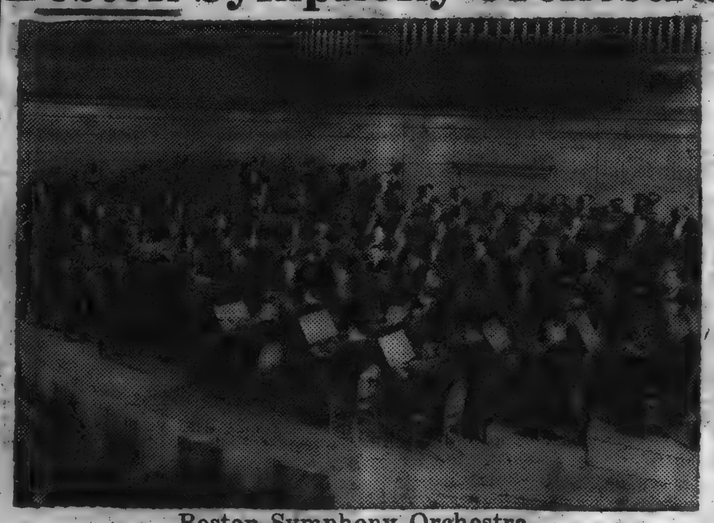
The first broadcast, to be heard at 8:15 p. m., EWT, over 145 stations on Saturday, inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major broadcasting organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
DEC 23 1942

WJHP to Present—

Boston Symphony Orchestra



Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will return to the air after an absence of five years to broadcast over the Blue Network, Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Co., announced today.

The first broadcast, to be heard from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m., EWT, over WJHP and 145 other stations next Saturday inaugurates a unique affiliation between one of the great orchestras of the world and a major [illegible] organization.

The Boston Symphony orchestra was the first principal orchestra to give regular broadcast concerts, being first heard by the mass radio audience in 1926. It was also the first full symphony orchestra to make records, first recording for Victor in 1917. Millions of this orchestra's records have been sold.

Dr. Koussevitzky expressed great satisfaction at this new opportunity to bring "the sublime joy of music" to the nation at large.

Founded in 1881 by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, the Boston Symphony orchestra has, through its long career, held faithfully to the objective laid down for it by its founder—"to play the best music in the best way." The forthcoming series represents a union of a great orchestra and a great audience through the broadcasting of an all comprehensive musical program—symphony, "Pops," and open air concerts.

work. The orchestra has not been heard on the air for several years due to union difficulties.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 20 1942

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
DEC 27 1942

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Again

Last week saw the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the networks after an absence of five years.

A new series of broadcasts by the first great orchestra to be heard on the air, its concerts having been broadcast as early as 1926, started yesterday. The broadcasts will be made by the Blue Network from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. every Saturday for 46 weeks.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
DEC 22 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—Carl Wales Stockbridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist whose parents were talented musicians, died tonight after a short illness. He was stricken ill last Thursday after a symphony rehearsal.

...MPHONY ...O THE AIR

...re Marion Claire and Thomas L. Thomas, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will sing the leading roles.

This operetta, written by Rene Hastings, young Los Angeles composer, won out over 2232 entries from 46 states and Canada. The backstage romance has been performed twice before over Mutual.

Soprano Jessica Dragonette and Tenor Bill Perry share the spotlight on KMOX and the Columbia network's musical "Saturday Night Serenade," tomorrow at 8:45 p. m.

Miss Dragonette will sing "With All My Heart" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." Perry sings "Dear Little Boy of Mine" and "Sweet Little Jesus Boy." Gus Haenschen's Orchestra will be heard and the "Serenaders" chorus will sing "When the Lights Go On Again."

This Clipping From RACINE, WIS.
JOURNAL TIMES

DEC 5-1942

Bass Clarinet Hits New 'Low' in Orchestra

BOSTON.—(U.P.)—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest tone is equivalent to the lowest A-flat on a piano.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer.

This Clipping From TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 5 - 1942

Orchestra Will Honor Frenchmen

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works of French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the Federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes Symphony Orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Honors French Dead

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Pays Tribute To French

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Salutes French Fleet; Is Unionized

Boston, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

This Clipping From KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

DEC 5 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PAYS FRENCH TRIBUTE

Boston, Dec. 5, (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's first concert since becomng unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

during the evening ...
mony

Post Dec 7

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO BROADCAST AGAIN

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season

Herald Page 1

Boston Symphony Going Back on Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS

DEC 5 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PAYS TRIBUTE TO FRENCH HEROS

ENTERS UNION

Signed Three Year Contract After Federation Changed By-Laws

BOSTON, Dec. 5, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the bylaws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Concert Schedule

On returning from its annual Western trip, which will occupy this week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its ninth pair of concerts in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night, Dec. 18 and 19. There will be a concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Thursday night, Dec. 17.

Serge Koussevitzky announces the following program for the Boston concerts: Corelli's Suite for String Orchestra (Sarabande, Gigue, and Bedinerie), Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major (Koechel No. 543), and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

Richard Burgin will conduct the concert in Cambridge. His progrom will consist of Bach's Suite in B minor for Flute and Strings, in which George Laurent will take the solo part, Lopatnikoff's Sinfonietta, and the First Symphony of Gustav Mahler.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Resume Broadcasts

New York, Dec. 6.—(AP.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

DEC 5 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PAYS TRIBUTE TO FRENCHMEN

Boston, Dec. 5.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James G. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto, the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the Federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years, Dec. 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

DEC 7 - 1942

... officers of the ...

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

New York, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years the 26th under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston symphony, under Dr Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

[11]

This Clipping From RACINE, WIS.
JOURNAL TIMES

DEC 5-1942

Bass Clarinet Hits New 'Low' in Orchestra

BOSTON.—(U.P.)—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shostakovich Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest tone is equivalent to the lowest A-flat on a piano.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer.

This Clipping From PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Orchestra Pays Tribute To French

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

DEC 5 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PAYS TRIBUTE TO FRENCHMEN

Boston, Dec. 5.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James G. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto, the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the Federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

DEC 5 - 1942

Orchestra Will Honor Frenchmen

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works of French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, President of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the Federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes Symphony Orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From BINGHAMPTON, N. Y.
PRESS

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Salutes French Fleet; Is Unionized

Boston, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

This Clipping From KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

DEC 5 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PAYS FRENCH TRIBUTE

Boston, Dec. 5, (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's first concert since becomng unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

This Clipping From CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston Symphony Honors French Dead

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

Commenting on this phase, the trustees said in a statement:

"The most important change in the by-laws of the American Federation of Musicians is that which recognizes symphony orchestras, in effect, as in a special category, in according them the right to call players from other parts of the country outside the jurisdiction of the local union."

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

DEC 5 - 1942

Boston, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with 'La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

Much of the remainder of the program consisted of works by French composers.

Trustees of the orchestra last night confirmed the announcement of James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, that the orchestra had entered into a contract with the union.

Petrillo had announced that the orchestra, hitherto the only non-union major symphony in the nation, has signed a three-year agreement after the federation amended its by-laws.

during the evening ...
mony

Rad Dai 1

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO BROADCAST AGAIN

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the Symphony's 46-week season

Herald page 1

Boston Symphony Going Back on Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years Dec. 26 under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to join the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

DEC 5 - 1942

Dead French Honored By Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Dec. 5 (AP) — The Boston Symphony orchestra's first concert since becoming unionized paid tribute to Frenchmen who died for the honor of their country.

Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, prefaced yesterday's concert by announcing:

"We shall begin with La Marseillaise' in memory of the brave French sailors who died heroically aboard their ships for the peace of the world and the honor of France."

The audience applauded the announcement, which was taken to refer to the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon to prevent its being seized by Germans.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 6 - 1942

Boston Symphony Concert Schedule

On returning from its annual Western trip, which will occupy this week, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its ninth pair of concerts in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night, Dec. 18 and 19. There will be a concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Thursday night, Dec. 17.

Serge Koussevitzky announces the following program for the Boston concerts: Corelli's Suite for String Orchestra (Sarabande, Gigue, and Bedinerie), Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major (Koechel No. 543), and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

Richard Burgin will conduct the concert in Cambridge. His progrom will consist of Bach's Suite in B minor for Flute and Strings, in which George Laurent will take the solo part, Lopatnikoff's Sinfonietta, and the First Symphony of Gustav Mahler.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Resume Broadcasts

New York, Dec. 6.—(AP.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26 under a long term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Air

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years, Dec. 26, under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the Nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

DEC 7 - 1942

... officers of the ...

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO RETURN TO AIR

New York, Dec. 6—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years the 26th under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston symphony, under Dr Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

The Blue Network announces it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent signing of a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will bring the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony to be heard over a radio network. It gave a series of concerts in 1926 under Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Radio

New York, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26th under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years, under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by the federation president, James C. Petrillo.

REMEMBER PEARL HARBOR!

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Radio Contract

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (U. P.).—The Blue Network announced today that it had signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.), will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

Remember Pearl Harbor! Buy War Bonds and Stamps for every member of your family!

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ON RADIO

First of Series of 46 Concerts To Be Broadcast On the 26th

Boston, Dec. 7—The Boston Symphony orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of 46 weekly radio concerts on Saturday, December 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and a 145-station hookup, the Blue network announced here today.

Although the network announced no figures, it is estimated in radio and music circles that the contract will involve about $100,000. The contract is understood to have been negotiated by Colonel David Sarnoff, of the army signal corps, president of the Radio Corporation of America, of which the Blue is a subsidiary.

Under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, most of the concerts in the series will originate in Symphony hall, Boston, the first being scheduled from 8.15 o'clock to 9.15. Dates and times of other broadcasts will be announced later.

When the orchestra's regular season ends on May 1, the series will continue with "Pops" concerts conducted by Arthur Fiedler until early July and then with open-air concerts on the Charles-river esplanade. If conditions permit, it is hoped also to broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

When and if James C. Petrillo, president of the Musicians' union, lifts his ban on the making of records, it is assumed that under the new contract the Boston symphony will make recordings for RCA-Victor, another RCA subsidiary.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ON RADIO

First of Series of 46 Concerts to Be Broadcast Dec. 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of a forty-six weekly radio concerts on Saturday, Dec. 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and a 145-station hook-up, the Blue network announced here yesterday.

Although the network announced no figures, it is estimated in radio and music circles that the contract will involve about $100,000. The contract is understood tto have been negotiated by Colonel David Sarnoff, of the Army Signal Corps, president of the Radio Corporation of America, of which the Blue is a subsidiary.

Under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, most of the concerts in the series will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, the first being scheduled from 8:15 o'clock to 9:15. Dates and times of other

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Orchestra on Radio

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of forty-six weekly radio concerts on Saturday, Dec. 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and

Boston Symphony Concerts and Pops to Be Broadcast

Globe Dec 7 Page 1

NEW YORK, Dec. 6—A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced today by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 and will be carried over 145 stations, Woods said.

The broadcasts are made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the Federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, and had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

Symphony and Pops

Continued on Page 7

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

Koussevitsky Orchestra to Go On Air Weekly

BostonSymphonyWill Star Blue Network Series on Saturday Night, Dec. 26

A long-term contract to broadcas concerts of the Boston Symphony under its conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, was announced yesterday by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company, 30 Rockefeller Plaza. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of forty-six weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was hoped that there would be a resumption of broadcasting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Music Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music Center last June.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the by-laws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
DEC 10 1942

Symphony Pianist From Porto Rica

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Porto Rica. He was sent, in 1917, by the Porto Rican government to complete his musical education in the New England Conservatory of Music. In 1924 he made his recital debut in Boston, and in 1926, his orchestral debut, under Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony. He has given recitals in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Barcelona and many American cities. Mr. Sanroma is now a regular member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and with it he will play the piano part in Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" in Syria Mosque Sunday afternoon. The same orchestra will play in the mosque Saturday night.

Mr. Sanroma

Symphony and Pops to Go on Network

Continued from the First Page

The contract with the Blue Network company, Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will bring the Pops concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was hoped that there would be a resumption of broadcasting the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood Music Shed, Lenox. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Kousevitzky.

Long-Term Contract

The Boston Symphony gained lo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the Federation. The bringing it into the federation. The most important concession permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in this country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the bylaws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

The contract with the Blue Network company, it was said, will cover several seasons, rather than, as is customary in contracts with such orchestras, just one season.

T At Ko

TAYL

THE annual concert compliment
Toledo Museum of Art, whi
Boston Symphony orchestra tomor Koussevitzky conducting, will be events of the winter.

The Boston Symphony will gi at the Hill auditorium in Ann A tended by a number of Toledoa

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J.
Koussevitzky from Toledo to A and will remain for the concert will be guests at a buffet supp
Charles A. Sink will give in their cert. Mr. Sink is head of the Musical society.

Other Toledoans who will a
'Arbor this evening are Mr. and

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
DEC 9 - 1942

Music Review

By Isabelle Workman Evans

There probably has never been a larger audience assembled at Kleinhans Music Hall and there undoubtedly has never been as thrilling a concert as last evening when the magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra and its superb conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played Haydn and Shostakovitch. Certainly there must be a feeling of gratitude to the sponsor, Zorah B. Berry, for the privilege of hearing the monumental Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony intrepreted by so perfect an exponent as Dr. Koussevitzky.

No mere radio hearing could ever provide an adequate appraisal of this work. Colossal in tonal effect and eloquent in its thematic material, the tremendous driving power of its emotional urge is irresistible. To this reviewer, the work does not seem too long, for when compared to other epic works of the theater, of literature or of music it is no more exhausting or unduly repetitious.

As far away as we in America are, we nevertheless are frequently distraught over the fierce struggles taking place elsewhere. As sensitive an individual as Shostakovitch, with the intensity of his Russian temperament, while directly affected by the siege of Leningrad, must have felt deeply every wistful phrase and every tempestuous climax so vividly interpreted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The orchestra instruments are used superbly, with beautiful contrast in expression achieved between winds, percussion and strings. The string choirs are magnificent in the Adagio. The long "Bolero" of the first movement establishes the mood for the entire work and the dramatic climax attained in the finale is awe-inspiring.

Of course, the Boston group is unsurpassed and how wonderful it would be if Koussevitzky could be in more than one place at a time. Because he was seriously ill before the concert last evening, the starting time was delayed some fifteen minutes, but there was no stinting by the conductor. He drove and cajoled his men to amazing heights in the Shostakovitch, while in the Haydn No. 88 in G major, which he always interprets so beautifully, his marvelous stage presence was similar to an occasion described by one reviewer in this apt fashion: "He loves Haydn, and his way of letting the orchestra race on while he gives the cues only by slight motions and happy glances, while his hands rest at his sides, is one of the most heart-warming scenes our concert halls enframe."

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is slated to succeed John Barbirolli as chief conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony next year . . . Pola Negri's indebtedness to Mr. Whiskers for back taxes runs into six figures, and her other creditors include Prince David Mdivani and Helen Rubenstein . . . Doris Duke Cromwell, who once studied tap-dancing under Bill Robinson, is now taking piano lessons from Garland Wilson at Cerutei's, and rumba lessons from Tony De Marco. Getting ready for the night shifts? . . . Bette Davis is the most likely candidate to portray Bette Davis in "The Life of Bette Davis," which is something new under the celluloid sun . . . Orson Welles, whose continuance in the movies is rated more important to "morale" than his presence in the armed services, draws the male lead opposite Joan Fontaine in Twentieth Century's "Jane Eyre," upon which Aldous Huxley is now putting the finishing touches . . . Ed Schreiber, former drumbeater for Warners, has joined the OWI, and Milton Swerling, Harry Warner's son-in-law, has got himself an Army liaison post in Washington.

N.B.C. HAS ordered performers to refrain from describing the Japs as "yellows," since our friends, the Chinese are likewise members of the yellow race . . . Labor organizations and unions plan to establish a chain of service men's canteens from coast to coast . . . Busboys and waiters are being flown from here to Panama to serve Government contractors . . . Restaurant prices will soon be fixed by Government order . . . Almost a third of New York's doctors are in the armed forces . . . So many anti-Nazi movies are being turned out that Hollywood has run into a new "priority," on German uniforms . . . The Artie Shaws (Betty Kern) will be three by spring . . . And speaking of straws in the wind, on November 30 we printed "the WPA to be wiped out of existence in the next U. S. Budget." From the headlines December 4: "Roosevelt abolishes WPA."

[12]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

The Blue Network announces it has signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent signing of a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will bring the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

The Boston orchestra was the first symphony to be heard over a radio network. It gave a series of concerts in 1926 under Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Will Return to Radio

New York, Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to the air after an absence of five years December 26th under a long-term contract with the Blue Network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston Symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by Federation President James C. Petrillo.

At that time Petrillo said that the contract would permit the orchestra to return to the radio.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony To Return to Air

NEW YORK Dec. 6 (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra will return to the air Dec. 26 after an absence of five years, under a long term contract with the Blue network, it was announced today.

The concerts will be broadcast weekly during the symphony's 46-week season over the 145-station network. Most will originate from Symphony hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "pops" concerts from the Charles river esplanade beginning in May.

The Boston symphony, under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, became the last major symphony orchestra in the nation to become a member of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL) with announcement of the signing last Thursday by the federation president, James C. Petrillo.

REMEMBER PEARL HARBOR!

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Radio Contract

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (U. P.).—The Blue Network announced today that it had signed a contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a series of concerts starting Saturday, Dec. 26.

The arrangement, made possible by the recent action of the Boston orchestra in signing a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.), will bring the Boston orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky back to the air after an absence of five years, during which it was banned as a non-union organization by James Caesar Petrillo, head of the musicians' union.

Remember Pearl Harbor! Buy War Bonds and Stamps for every member of your family!

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ON RADIO

First of Series of 46 Concerts To Be Broadcast On the 26th

Boston, Dec. 7—The Boston Symphony orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of 46 weekly radio concerts on Saturday, December 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and a 145-station hookup, the Blue network announced here today.

Although the network announced no figures, it is estimated in radio and music circles that the contract will involve about $100,000. The contract is understood to have been negotiated by Colonel David Sarnoff, of the army signal corps, president of the Radio Corporation of America, of which the Blue is a subsidiary.

Under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, most of the concerts in the series will originate in Symphony hall, Boston, the first being scheduled from 8.15 o'clock to 9.15. Dates and times of other broadcasts will be announced later.

When the orchestra's regular season ends on May 1, the series will continue with "Pops" concerts conducted by Arthur Fiedler until early July and then with open-air concerts on the Charles-river esplanade. If conditions permit, it is hoped also to broadcast from the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

When and if James C. Petrillo, president of the Musicians' union, lifts his ban on the making of records, it is assumed that under the new contract the Boston symphony will make recordings for RCA-Victor, another RCA subsidiary.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

BOSTON ORCHESTRA WILL PLAY ON RADIO

First of Series of 46 Concerts to Be Broadcast Dec. 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of a forty-six weekly radio concerts on Saturday, Dec. 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and a 145-station hook-up, the Blue network announced here yesterday.

Although the network announced no figures, it is estimated in radio and music circles that the contract will involve about $100,000. The contract is understood tto have been negotiated by Colonel David Sarnoff, of the Army Signal Corps, president of the Radio Corporation of America, of which the Blue is a subsidiary.

Under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, most of the concerts in the series will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, the first being scheduled from 8:15 o'clock to 9:15. Dates and times of other

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
DEC 7 - 1942

Boston Orchestra on Radio

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which recently signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, will open a series of forty-six weekly radio concerts on Saturday, Dec. 26, over Station WJZ, New York, and

Boston Symphony Concerts and Pops to Be Broadcast

Globe Dec 7 Page 1

NEW YORK, Dec. 6—A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced today by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 and will be carried over 145 stations, Woods said.

The broadcasts are made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the Federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States, and had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

Symphony and Pops

Continued on Page 7

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
DEC 7 - 1942

Koussevitsky Orchestra to Go On Air Weekly

Boston Symphony Will Start Blue Network Series on Saturday Night, Dec. 26

A long-term contract to broadcast concerts of the Boston Symphony, under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, was announced yesterday by Mark Woods, president of the Blue Network Company, 30 Rockefeller Plaza. The first broadcast will be heard Dec. 26 from 8:15 to 9:15 p. m. and will be carried over 145 stations, Mr. Woods said. The program for the first concert was not announced.

The broadcasts were made possible by a three-year agreement between the orchestra and the American Federation of Musicians, as announced on Dec. 3 by James Caesar Petrillo, president of the union. The agreement brought the Boston Symphony into the federation. Until the compromise was reached late last month the orchestra had been the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. It had been barred from radio and recording fields since Aug. 13, 1940.

Weekly Radio Concerts

The contract with the Blue Network Company, Mr. Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of forty-six weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's auditorium in Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will broadcast the Pops concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July, and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was hoped that there would be a resumption of broadcasting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Music Shed, Lenox, Mass. The Tanglewood festival is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, who came to the financial rescue of the Berkshire Music Center last June.

The Boston Symphony gained several concessions from Mr. Petrillo's union in reaching an agreement bringing it into the federation. The most important one permits a symphony orchestra to hire a musician from any local in the country and Canada without any restrictions from local boards. Previously the by-laws of the union specified that a conductor could not go outside the local jurisdiction to hire new men.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
DEC 10 1942

Symphony Pianist From Porto Rica

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was born in Porto Rica. He was sent, in 1917, by the Porto Rican government to complete his musical education in the New England Conservatory of Music. In 1924 he made his recital debut in Boston, and in 1926, his orchestral debut, under Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony. He has given recitals in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Madrid, Barcelona and many American cities. Mr. Sanroma is now a regular member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and with it he will play the piano part in Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" in Syria Mosque Sunday afternoon. The same orchestra will play in the mosque Saturday night.

Mr. Sanroma

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

...of an impor- takes rail...
...n Station at ...railroa...
...onth, move needed fo...
...d cars. Yet, can move...
...s track setup supplies f...
...network of ciently! I...
...st . . . border than 33,00...
...y . . . natural The spiri...
...both, united terprise —...
...s of railroad! continued...
...y leadership Defense T...
...ccess. For it ments thi...

Symphony and Pops to Go on Network

Continued from the First Page

The contract with the Blue Network company, Woods said, will provide the radio public with concerts of the orchestra weekly through its season of 46 weeks each year. Most of the concerts will be played in Symphony Hall, Boston.

At the end of the regular season, May 1, the network will bring the Pops concerts under Arthur Fiedler until early July and the open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, which follow. The announcement said it was

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 9 - 1942

Toledoans To Be Guests At Party For Koussevitzky

By IDA TAYLOR

THE annual concert complimentary to members of the Toledo Museum of Art, which will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra tomorrow evening with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be one of the outstanding events of the winter.

The Boston Symphony will give a concert this evening at the Hill auditorium in Ann Arbor, which will be attended by a number of Toledoans.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Kountz will motor Mr. Koussevitzky from Toledo to Ann Arbor this afternoon, and will remain for the concert this evening. They also will be guests at a buffet supper which Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sink will give in their home following the concert. Mr. Sink is head of the University of Michigan Musical society.

Other Toledoans who will attend the concert in Ann Arbor this evening are Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould.

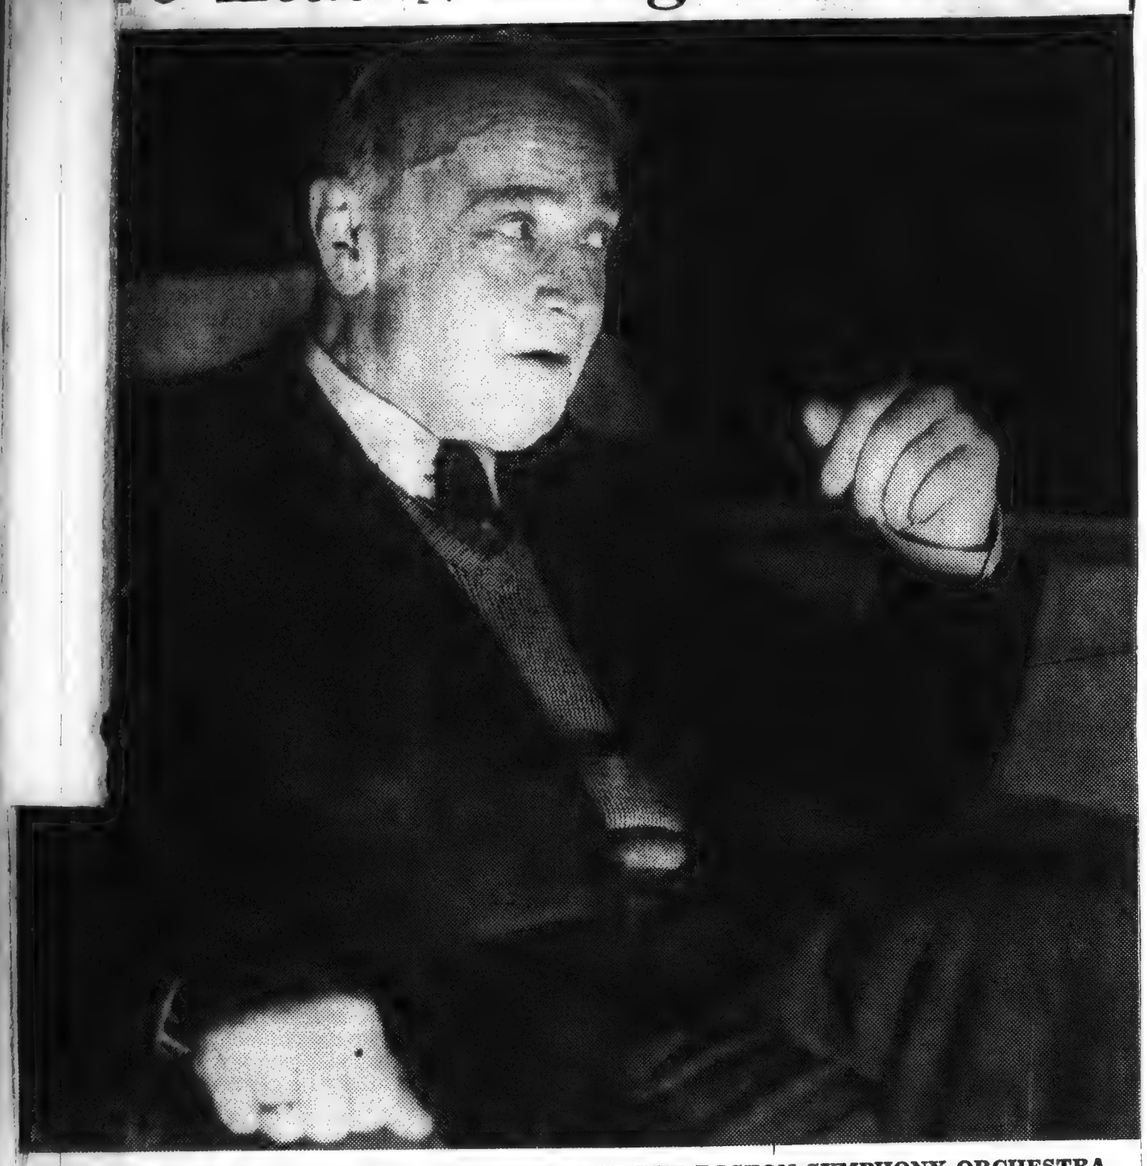
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
DEC 7 - 1942

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is slated to succeed John Barbirolli as chief conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony next year . . . Pola Negri's indebtedness to Mr. Whiskers for back taxes runs into six figures, and her other creditors include Prince David Mdivani and Helen Rubenstein . . . Doris Duke Cromwell, who once studied tap-dancing under Bill Robinson, is now taking piano lessons from Garland Wilson at Cerutel's, and rumba lessons from Tony De Marco. Getting ready for the night shifts? . . . Bette Davis is the most likely candidate to portray Bette Davis in "The Life of Bette Davis," which is something new under the celluloid sun . . . Orson Welles, whose continuance in the movies is rated more important to "morale" than his presence in the armed services, draws the male lead opposite Joan Fontaine in Twentieth Century's "Jane Eyre," upon which Aldous Huxley is now putting the finishing touches . . . Ed Schreiber, former drumbeater for Warners, has joined the OWI, and Milton Swerling, Harry Warner's son-in-law, has got himself an Army liaison post in Washington.

N.B.C. HAS ordered performers to refrain from describing the Japs as "yellows," since our friends, the Chinese are likewise members of the yellow race . . . Labor organizations and unions plan to establish a chain of service men's canteens from coast to coast . . . Busboys and waiters are being flown from here to Panama to serve Government contractors . . . Restaurant prices will soon be fixed by Government order . . . Almost a third of New York's doctors are in the armed forces . . . So many anti-Nazi movies are being turned out that Hollywood has run into a new "priority," on German uniforms . . . The Artie Shaws (Betty Kern) will be three by spring . . . And speaking of straws in the wind, on November 30 we printed "the WPA to be wiped out of existence in the next U. S. Budget." From the headlines December 4: "Roosevelt abolishes WPA."

[12]

To Lead Visiting Orchestra



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY . . . CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 9 - 1942

Boston Symphony Enhances Power of Shostakovich's 7th

Capacity Audience Is Enthusiastic Over Fervor and Tonal Splendor of Orchestra

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

Tuesday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, presented the anomaly of this aristocrat of orchestras playing—but how magnificently — a symphony dedicated to the "plain man," the Leningrad (Seventh) Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich.

Kleinhans Music Hall was surcharged, as usual when the Boston Symphony plays, with excitement and anticipation. Every seat was filled. Standees by the dozens lined the rear of the auditorium. It was the gala musical occasion of the year. Everyone was out to pay tribute to the man who built this great American orchestra into the superb instrument that it is.

* * *

The Shostakovich was played with such fervor, such intensity and such tonal splendor we were almost persuaded that the work actually is a cosmic picture of the soul of the "ordinary, quiet (Russian) people" (these are Shostakovich's own words); their "transformation into heroes by the outbreak of the war" and the "presentiment of the victory" that is to come. Almost, but not quite—superb in conception, in sound and in expressive impact as the performance was.

Dr. Koussevitzky performed one of his feats of legerdemain. Spurred by his enthusiasm, guided by his intimate study of the score and his infinite capacity for exacting clarity of detail, his orchestra can make the banal sound extraordinary and the mediocre sound inspired.

* * *

That's what happened with the Seventh. Dr. Koussevitzky and his players expended themselves upon it with prodigal fervor. But though they made it tonally resplendent and full of power, they could not remove its puffed-up eloquence and make it terse and meaningful.

Just how much of the enthusiasm this symphony has aroused is due to our natural emotional response to the brave stand of the Soviet peoples against our common enemy is a question. If it serves to remind us of our indebtedness and inspires us to equal courage, perhaps its musical significance or insignificance is relatively unimportant.

The heady sonorities of the Shostakovich were preceded by the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 88, which was like a long, cooling draught of spring water by comparison.

* * *

The enthusiasm of the audience ran high throughout the program. It is more than likely that some of it was rejoicing over the appearance of the orchestra despite reports that it might not come to Buffalo because of wartime transportation problems, and its non-union status (engagements in several cities were canceled for this reason).

But, lo and behold! The orches-

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 9 - 1942

Boston Symphony Enhances Power of Shostakovich's 7th

Capacity Audience Is Enthusiastic Over Fervor and Tonal Splendor of Orchestra

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

Tuesday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, presented the anomaly of this aristocrat of orchestras playing—but how magnificently — a symphony dedicated to the "plain man," the Leningrad (Seventh) Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich.

Kleinhans Music Hall was surcharged, as usual when the Boston Symphony plays, with excitement and anticipation. Every seat was filled. Standees by the dozens lined the rear of the auditorium. It was the gala musical occasion of the year. Everyone was out to pay tribute to the man who built this great American orchestra into the superb instrument that it is.

* * *

The Shostakovich was played with such fervor, such intensity and such tonal splendor we were almost persuaded that the work actually is a cosmic picture of the soul of the "ordinary, quiet (Russian) people" (these are Shostakovich's own words); their "transformation into heroes by the outbreak of the war" and the "presentiment of the victory" that is to come. Almost, but not quite—superb in conception, in sound and in expressive impact as the performance was.

Dr. Koussevitzky performed one of his feats of legerdemain. Spurred by his enthusiasm, guided by his intimate study of the score and his infinite capacity for exacting clarity of detail, his orchestra can make the banal sound extraordinary and the mediocre sound inspired.

* * *

That's what happened with the Seventh. Dr. Koussevitzky and his players expended themselves upon it with prodigal fervor. But though they made it tonally resplendent and full of power, they could not remove its puffed-up eloquence and make it terse and meaningful.

Just how much of the enthusiasm this symphony has aroused is due to our natural emotional response to the brave stand of the Soviet peoples against our common enemy is a question. If it serves to remind us of our indebtedness and inspires us to equal courage, perhaps its musical significance or insignificance is relatively unimportant.

The heady sonorities of the Shostakovich were preceded by the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 88, which was like a long, cooling draught of spring water by comparison.

* * *

The enthusiasm of the audience ran high throughout the program. It is more than likely that some of it was rejoicing over the appearance of the orchestra despite reports that it might not come to Buffalo because of wartime transportation problems, and its non-union status (engagements in several cities were canceled for this reason).

But, lo and behold! The orches-

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
DEC 9 - 1942

Koussevitzky To Conduct Tonight

Serge Koussevitzky and the Bostony Symphony orchestra, which has been coming to Ann Arbor annually since 1930, will provide the sixth Choral Union program at 8:30 tonight in Hill auditorium, at which time Dr. Koussevitzky will bring the orchestra for its only Michigan appearance.

The program which he has arranged specially for the Ann Arbor audience, will open with Haydn's Symphony number 88 in G. major, following which he will play the much-talked-about Shostakovich Seventh Symphony, known as the War Symphony, in which the ideals, aspirations, struggles and efforts of Russia in the present crisis are portrayed.

Wherever this monumental work has been heard it has created a furor, and discussions have been earnest and energetic as to its musical potentialities, but all agree that it is the outstanding war composition of the period. It can only be adequately performed by a large orchestra, such as the Boston which numbers 110 men.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
DEC 13 1942

Koussevitzky To Stay With Boston Symphony

By The United Press

CLEVELAND, Dec. 12—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Mr. Spalding said in behalf of Dr. Koussevitzy, Boston Symphony conductor who was here with his orchestra for a one-night engagement.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
DEC 12 1942

Koussevitzky Rumor Denied

CLEVELAND, Dec. 11 (UP).—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Mr. Spalding said in behalf of Dr. Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor, who was here with his orchestra for a one-night engagement.

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday

THE concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater on Monday evening, will be the start of what might be termed a new era for that famous organization.

Settlement of protracted negotiations with the national musicians' organization paved the way for resumption of tours, recording and broadcasting by the orchestra.

The Blue Network has announced that the Boston group will be heard in a series of 46 broadcasts over Station WJZ and a 145-station hookup beginning Dec. 26. And when the ban on the making of recordings is lifted, the Boston orchestra will again make discs for the RCA-Victor Company.

Meanwhile, interest in the forthcoming appearance in Rochester of the orchestra is mounting.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen for the program two symphonies which are as widely separated in style as possible. The opening work will be the Haydn G Major Symphony No. 88, a work in which both conductor and orchestra specialize and excel.

The major work on the program will be the "Leningrad" Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovitch, his seventh.

REDUCTION

RATIO

16x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION

DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday Night

Attendance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater Monday evening, is certain to reach the capacity proportions of former years, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to schedule this musical event until a few days ago.

There is widespread interest in Rochester in the appearance of this celebrated orchestra. And in the program to be performed, as well. That is partially because the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the entire history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

This is true, partly because Shostakovitch poured into the pages of this monumental work what he and his fellow Russians in arms felt in the face of destructive fire aimed at their country.

It is true also because Shostakovitch has wrought a work that possesses the spark of undoubted greatness. Critics hearing the work have disagreed on that point. But none of them denies the excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

DEC 11 1942

Audience Enthralled By Boston Symphony

Complimentary Concert in Museum of Art Is Triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky

Super-excellent was the musical fare served up last night by the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra, playing in the peristyle at the annual concert complimentary to Toledo Museum of Art members.

The audience, numbering among it many of Toledo's most prominent musicians, received the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with open arms. Time after time applause filled the peristyle, especially following the rendition of Ravel's "Symphonic Fragments from Daphnis and Chloe."

A fresh and resourceful piece of work, the three movements were performed with magnificent interpretation. Shading from stately, measured mood, the orchestra gained crescendo; to clash and resound, shudder and blast in almost terrifying unison; only to lapse into calm lucidity, broken now and again by a clear buoyancy. The audience was delighted; showing its appreciation by twice recalling Dr. Koussevitzky to the podium.

"Corelli's "Suite for Strings" opened the evening's program, with the movements "Sababande, Gigue and Badinerie," attesting to the beauty and clarity of the string instruments; at intervals melodious and muted; then doing an abrupt about-turn to offer contrast in sharp staccatto notes.

Haunting and strange was the second selection, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60," by Prokofieff. Unsurpassed for variations in musical instrumentality, it is concert in a grave mood, a conundrum of notes, scales and bars.

The final scheduled program selection was the Tschaikoosky "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36." —B. M.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

DEC 12 1942

"PERENNIAL RUMOR"

Cleveland, Dec. 11.—(UP)—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Spalding said.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

DEC 11 1942

Boston Orchestra Leaves Memories For Music Lovers

Dr. Koussevitzky Highly Praised For His Direction and Variety

By ARTHUR PETERSON

War and all the other vexations that await the promised progression into a satisfactory last chord may claim the whole attention of the Toledo Koussevitzkyites again. The annual big evening with the Boston sorcerer is a fact accomplished. The Peristyle has another memory to take into its 10th year.

The concert last night was felicity compounded, splendid music splendidly received, and if there is a seamy side to remember, it is only this — that Koussevitzkyites outside the Museum engineering membership were not eligible for seats.

Is it ordained that another war year will leave us with any symphony orchestras and the margin over taxes to patronize them? Will Dr. Koussevitzky then be at his present post? Depending upon what portents it may find in its tea cup, the Museum might consider the feasibility of a two-night stand for the Bostonians the next time—one night for the members and one night for the box office. That ought to make two crowds.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky is the sort of conductor who could coax music out of a row of empty chairs, there is not much point in going deeply into the degree of his accomplishment last night with the many rows of chairs filled by musicians who had an entire right to be in them.

Its Sea-Like Self

The orchestra was its usual sea-like self, a tremendous fluid force always ready for its response [illegible] coil, eddy, purl, and be everywhere and everything, often all at once.

The evening began with an exercise in clarity, a Corelli string suite in contrasting moods, first a Sarabande, then a Gigue, and finally a rustly and stimulating Badinerie. The suite is very old music, but like so much of the best old music when played with comprehension and respect, it comes off the bows as from the score of a brand new master, without any creaking.

After Corelli, Dr. Koussevitzky called the rest of the orchestra in for Prokofieff and Ravel and demonstrated what he always demonstrates very well indeed—that under his baton at least, the tangled and oddly colored obscurities that the moderns indulge in can be made not only exciting to [illegible] lucid to hear . . .

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

DEC 10 [illegible]

Boston Symph... In Shostako...

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Kous-

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST

DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither could, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now.

There are two remaining

Boston Symphony in Concert at Eastman Tomorrow

Koussevitzky's Program Lists Soviet Work

A NOVEL experience is awaiting Rochester music lovers tomorrow evening in the Eastman Theater.

It is not only the concert to be given by the world's finest orchestra, the Boston Symphony, but the fact that the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony, by Soviet Russia's Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony will present in contrast to Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major, No. 88.

Famous Conductor in Action

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky gives downbeat to Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Eastman tomorrow

[14]

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday Night

Attendance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater Monday evening, is certain to reach the capacity proportions of former years, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to schedule this musical event until a few days ago.

There is widespread interest in Rochester in the appearance of this celebrated orchestra. And in the program to be performed, as well. That is partially because the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the entire history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

This is true, partly because Shostakovitch poured into the pages of this monumental work what he and his fellow Russians in arms felt in the face of destructive fire aimed at their country.

It is true also because Shostakovitch has wrought a work that possesses the spark of undoubted greatness. Critics hearing the work have disagreed on that point. But none of them denies the excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 11 1942

Audience Enthralled By Boston Symphony

Complimentary Concert in Museum of Art Is Triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky

Super-excellent was the musical fare served up last night by the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra, playing in the peristyle at the annual concert complimentary to Toledo Museum of Art members.

The audience, numbering among it many of Toledo's most prominent musicians, received the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with open arms. Time after time applause filled the peristyle, especially following the rendition of Ravel's "Symphonic Fragments from Daphnis and Chloe."

A fresh and resourceful piece of work, the three movements were performed with magnificent interpretation. Shading from stately, measured mood, the orchestra gained crescendo; to clash and resound, shudder and blast in almost terrifying unison; only to lapse into calm lucidity, broken now and again by a clear buoyancy. The audience was delighted; showing its appreciation by twice recalling Dr. Koussesitzky to the podium.

"Corelli's "Suite for Strings" opened the evening's program, with the movements "Sababand, Gigue and Badinerie," attesting to the beauty and clarity of the string instruments; at intervals melodious and muted; then doing an abrupt about-turn to offer contrast in sharp staccatto notes.

Haunting and strange was the second selection, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60," by Prokofieff. Unsurpassed for variations in musical instrumentality, it is concert in a grave mood, a conundrum of notes, scales and bars.

The final scheduled program selection was the Tschaikocsky "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36." —B. M.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

"PERENNIAL RUMOR"

Cleveland, Dec. 11.—(UP)—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Spalding said.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
DEC 11 1942

Boston Orchestra Leaves Memories For Music Lovers

Dr. Koussevitzky Highly Praised For His Direction and Variety

By ARTHUR PETERSON

War and all the other vexations that await the promised progression into a satisfactory last chord may claim the whole attention of the Toledo Koussevitzkyites again. The annual big evening with the Boston sorcerer is a fact accomplished. The Peristyle has another memory to take into its 10th year.

The concert last night was felicity compounded, splendid music splendidly received, and if there is a seamy side to remember, it is only this — that Koussevitzkyites outside the Museum were not eligible to membership were not eligible seats.

Is it ordained that another war year will leave us with any symphony orchestras and the margin over taxes to patronize them? Will Dr. Koussevitzky then be at his present post? Depending upon what portents it may find in its tea cup, the Museum might consider the feasibility of a two-night stand for the Bostonians the next time—one night for the members and one night for the box office. That ought to make two crowds.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky is the sort of conductor who could coax music out of a row of empty chairs, there is not much point in going deeply into the degree of his accomplishment last night with the many rows of chairs filled by musicians who had an entire right to be in them.

Its Sea-Like Self

The orchestra was its usual seaalways ready for its Neptune's trident like self, a tremendous fluid force nal to pound into spray, foam, recoil, eddy, purl, and be everywhere and everything, often all at once.

The evening began with an exercise in clarity, a Corelli string suite in contrasting moods, first a Sarabande, then a Gigue, and finally a rustly and stimulating Badinerie. The suite is very old music, but like so much of the best old music when played with comprehension and respect, it comes off the bows as from the score of a brand new master, without any creaking.

After Corelli, Dr. Koussevitzky called the rest of the orchestra in for Prokofieff and Ravel and demonstrated what he always demonstrates very well indeed—that under his baton at least, the tangled and oddly colored obscurities that the moderns indulge in can be made not only exciting to [illegible] lucid to hear . . . for

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
DEC [illegible]

Boston Symph In Shostako

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Kous-

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST
DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither could, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now.

There are two remaining

Boston Symphony in Concert at Eastm

Koussevitzky's Program Lists Soviet Work

A NOVEL experience is awaiting Rochester music lovers tomorrow evening in the Eastman Theater.

It is not only the concert to be given by the world's finest orchestra, the Boston Symphony, but the fact that the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony, by Soviet Russia's Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, c ductor of the Boston Symphor will present in contrast to Sh takovitch, one of his favorit among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major No. 88.

Famous Conductor in Action

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky gives downbeat to Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Eastman tomorrow

42 mphony day Night

oncert of the Boston Symphony Theater Monday evening, is cer- proportions of former years, in was not possible to schedule this days ago.

in of in as the nth ch. of re- the na- di- to the sta- use the ork ans uc- sta- hat ted the int. excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

Enthralled n Symphony cert in Museum of Art Dr. Koussevitzky

e musical fare served up last s Boston Symphony orchestra, e annual concert complimentary nembers.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

DEC 11 1942

Boston Orchestra Leaves Memories For Music Lovers

Dr. Koussevitzky Highly Praised For His Direction and Variety

By ARTHUR PETERSON

War and all the other vexations that await the promised progression into a satisfactory last chord may claim the whole attention of the Toledo Koussevitzkyites again. The annual big evening with the Boston sorcerer is a fact accomplished. The Peristyle has another memory to take into its 10th year.

The concert last night was felicity compounded, splendid music splendidly received, and if there is a seamy side to remember, it is only this — that Koussevitzkyites outside the Music Festival membership were not eligible for seats.

Is it ordained that another war year will leave us with any symphony orchestras and the margin over taxes to patronize them? Will Dr. Koussevitzky then be at his present post? Depending upon what portents it may find in its tea cup, the Museum might consider the feasibility of a two-night stand for the Bostonians the next time—one night for the members and one night for the box office. That ought to make two crowds.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky is the sort of conductor who could coax music out of a row of empty chairs, there is not much point in going deeply into the degree of his accomplishment last night with the many rows of chairs filled by musicians who had an entire right to be in them.

Its Sea-Like Self

The orchestra was its usual sea-like self, a tremendous fluid force always ready for its response [illegible] nal to pound into spray, foam, re- coil, eddy, purl, and be everywhere and everything, often all at once.

The evening began with an exercise in clarity, a Corelli string suite in contrasting moods, first a Sarabande, then a Gigue, and finally a rustly and stimulating Badinerie. The suite is very old music, but like so much of the best old music when played with comprehension and respect, it comes off the bows as from the score of a brand new master, without any creaking.

After Corelli, Dr. Koussevitzky called the rest of the orchestra in for Prokofieff and Ravel and demonstrated what he always demonstrates very well indeed—that under his baton at least, the tangled and oddly colored obscurities that the moderns indulge in can be made not only exciting [illegible] lucid to hear . . . for

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

DEC [illegible]

Boston Symph In Shostako

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Kous-

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST

DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither could, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now. There are two remaining

Boston Symphony in Concert at Eastman Tomorrow

Koussevitzky's Program Lists Soviet Work

A NOVEL experience is awaiting Rochester music lovers tomorrow evening in the Eastman Theater.

It is not only the concert to be given by the world's finest orchestra, the Boston Symphony, but the fact that the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony, by Soviet Russia's Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will present in contrast to Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major No. 88.

Famous Conductor in Action

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky gives downbeat to Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play in Eastman tomorrow

[14]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday Night

Attendance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater Monday evening, is certain to reach the capacity proportions of former years, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to schedule this musical event until a few days ago.

There is widespread interest in Rochester in the appearance of this celebrated orchestra. And in the program to be performed, as well. That is partially because the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the entire history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

This is true, partly because Shostakovitch poured into the pages of this monumental work what he and his fellow Russians in arms felt in the face of destructive fire aimed at their country.

It is true also because Shostakovitch has wrought a work that possesses the spark of undoubted greatness. Critics hearing the work have disagreed on that point. But none of them denies the excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 11 1942

Audience Enthralled By Boston Symphony

Complimentary Concert in Museum of Art Is Triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky

Super-excellent was the musical fare served up last night by the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra, playing in the peristyle at the annual concert complimentary to Toledo Museum of Art members.

The audience, numbering among it many of Toledo's most prominent musicians, received the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with open arms. Time after time applause filled the peristyle, especially following the rendition of Ravel's "Symphonic Fragments from Daphnis and Chloe."

A fresh and resourceful piece of work, the three movements were performed with magnificient interpretation. Shading from stately, measured mood, the orchestra gained crescendo; to clash and resound, shudder and blast in almost terrifying unison; only to lapse into calm lucidity, broken now and again by a clear buoyancy. The audience was delighted; showing its appreciation by twice recalling Dr. Koussesitzky to the podium.

"Corelli's "Suite for Strings" opened the evening's program, with the movements "Sababande, Gigue and Badinerie," attesting to the beauty and clarity of the string instruments; at intervals melodious and muted; then doing an abrupt about-turn to offer contrast in sharp staccatto notes.

Haunting and strange was the second selection, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60," by Prokofieff. Unsurpassed for variations in musical instrumentality, it is concert in a grave mood, a conundrum of notes, scales and bars.

The final scheduled program selection was the Tschaikocsky "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36."
—B. M.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

"PERENNIAL RUMOR"

Cleveland, Dec. 11.—(UP)—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Spalding said.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
DEC 11 1942

Boston Orchestra Leaves Memories For Music Lovers

Dr. Koussevitzky Highly Praised For His Direction and Variety

By ARTHUR PETERSON

War and all the other vexations that await the promised progression into a satisfactory last chord may claim the whole attention of the Toledo Koussevitzkyites again. The annual big evening with the Boston sorcerer is a fact accomplished. The Peristyle has another memory to take into its 10th year.

The concert last night was felicity compounded, splendid music splendidly received, and if there is a seamy side to remember, it is only this — that Koussevitzkyites outside the Museum's membership were not eligible for seats.

Is it ordained that another war year will leave us with any symphony orchestras and the margin over taxes to patronize them? Will Dr. Koussevitzky then be at his present post? Depending upon what portents it may find in its tea cup, the Museum might consider the feasibility of a two-night stand for the Bostonians the next time—one night for the members and one night for the box office. That ought to make two crowds.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky is the sort of conductor who could coax music out of a row of empty chairs, there is not much point in going deeply into the degree of his accomplishment last night with the many rows of chairs filled by musicians who had an entire right to be in them.

Its Sea-Like Self

The orchestra was its usual sea-like self, a tremendous fluid force always ready for its Neptune's signal to pound into spray, foam, recoil, eddy, purl, and be everywhere and everything, often all at once.

The evening began with an exercise in clarity, a Corelli string suite in contrasting moods, first a Sarabande, then a Gigue, and finally a rustly and stimulating Badinerie. The suite is very old music, but like so much of the best old music when played with comprehension and respect, it comes off the bows as from the score of a brand new master, without any creaking.

After Corelli, Dr. Koussevitzky called the rest of the orchestra in for Prokofieff and Ravel and demonstrated what he always demonstrates very well indeed—that under his baton at least, the tangled and oddly colored obscurities that the moderns indulge in can be made not only exciting to remember but lucid to hear . . . for the moment anyway.

Play Out of Sight

The Prokofieff choice was the "Lieutenant Kije" suite, a five-section narrative, largely humorous, in which the orchestral voices split up and fly around with queer scraps of melody.

Part of the orchestra played off-stage and out of sight, a stunt which alone would say everything that needs to be said about the exactness and confidence of Dr. Koussevitzky's control.

The Ravel interlude presented three "Symphonic Fragments" from "Daphnis and Chloe," huge contrasts of tone color from a world beyond the borders that were touched by Debussy.

The last production was the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, F-minor, a score which is guaranteed to get eight hours of work out of anybody in 40 minutes.

The great Russian is in his most assertive mood through most of this—furious about something, but not gloomy. There ought to be a law requiring every big orchestra to play the beautiful third movement, the Scherzo, at least once a season. The effect of nothing but plucked strings and echoes of plucking from the other sections is not of this world, not of this world.

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

Boston Symp... In Shostako...

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in C major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Kous-not be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony will present in contrast to Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST
DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

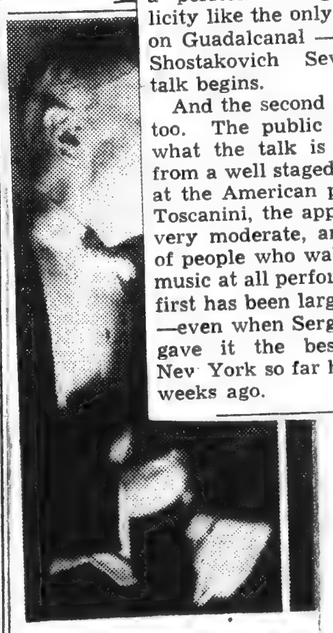
Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither would, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now.

There are two remaining puzzles, after all these hearings. One is why the conductors fought over it, and the other is why the audiences listen. The first can be answered by a performance generates publicity like the only Powers model on Guadalcanal — announce the Shostakovich Seventh and the talk begins.

And the second has an answer, too. The public wants to hear what the talk is about. Aside from a well staged demonstration at the American premiere under Toscanini, the applause has been very moderate, and the number of people who walked out on the music at all performances but the first has been larger than normal —even when Serge Koussevitzky gave it the best performance Nev York so far has heard, three weeks ago.



Famous Conductor

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky phony Orchestra, which [14]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 2 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday Night

Attendance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater Monday evening, is certain to reach the capacity proportions of former years, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to schedule this musical event until a few days ago.

There is widespread interest in Rochester in the appearance of this celebrated orchestra. And in the program to be performed, as well. That is partially because the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the entire history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

This is true, partly because Shostakovitch poured into the pages of this monumental work what he and his fellow Russians in arms felt in the face of destructive fire aimed at their country.

It is true also because Shostakovitch has wrought a work that possesses the spark of undoubted greatness. Critics hearing the work have disagreed on that point. But none of them denies the excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 11 1942

Audience Enthralled By Boston Symphony

Complimentary Concert in Museum of Art Is Triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky

Super-excellent was the musical fare served up last night by the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra, playing in the peristyle at the annual concert complimentary to Toledo Museum of Art members.

The audience, numbering among it many of Toledo's most prominent musicians, received the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with open arms. Time after time applause filled the peristyle, especially following the rendition of Ravel's "Symphonic Fragments from Daphnis and Chloe."

A fresh and resourceful piece of work, the three movements were performed with magnificient interpretation. Shading from stately, measured mood, the orchestra gained crescendo; to clash and resound, shudder and blast in almost terrifying unison; only to lapse into calm lucidity, broken now and again by a clear buoyancy. The audience was delighted; showing its appreciation by twice recalling Dr. Koussesitzky to the podium.

"Corelli's "Suite for Strings" opened the evening's program, with the movements "Sababande, Gigue and Badinerie," attesting to the beauty and clarity of the string instruments; at intervals melodious and muted; then doing an abrupt about-turn to offer contrast in sharp staccatto notes.

Haunting and strange was the second selection, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60," by Prokofieff. Unsurpassed for variations in musical instrumentality, it is concert in a grave mood, a conundrum of notes, scales and bars.

The final scheduled program selection was the Tschaikocsky "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36."
—B. M.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

"PERENNIAL RUMOR"

Cleveland, Dec. 11.—(UP)—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Spalding said.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

Boston Orch... Memories Fo...

Dr. Koussevitzky H... For His Direction ...

By ARTHU...

War and all the other ve... progression into a satisfact... whole attention of the Toled... annual big evening with the... complished. The Peristyle ha... its 10th year.

The concert last nigh... splendid music splendidly rec...

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

Boston Symphony Scores In Shostakovich's Seventh

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Koussevitzky's men faltered in the finale. The work is stupendous, if for no other reason than its length and it is even majestic and awe inspiring in its boldness and brutality. There are many passages that are melodiously beautiful in the romantic sense of the term, while as a piece of orchestral scoring it is a masterpiece. There is, without a doubt no composer today who knows better than does Mr. Shostakovich the art of blending and dovetailing instruments.

But these are all means to an end—they are not the thoughts and ideas themselves. The very things on which the work must depend for its future existence are the ones that appear most questionable at present. The themes, for the most part, lack conviction and that subtle something that demands their inevitable development and resolution. As a result the work seems inconclusive. (Perhaps this is an unwitting reflection of the state of the war at the time the work was composed.)

Theme Extended

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 13 1942

Boston Symp...

Koussevitzky's Program Lists Soviet Work

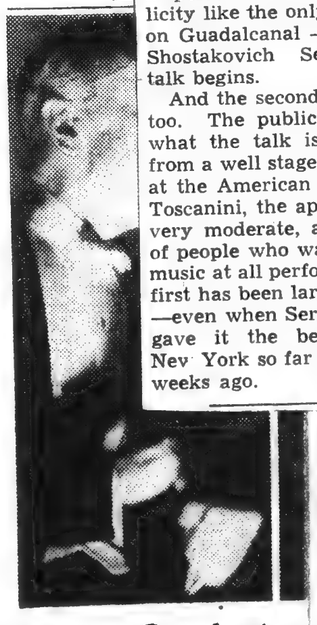
A NOVEL experience is awaiting Rochester music lovers tomorrow evening in the Eastman Theater.

It is not only the concert to be given by the world's finest orchestra, the Boston Symphony, but the fact that the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony, by Soviet Russia's Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony will present in contrast to Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major, No. 88.



Famous Conductor

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky phony Orchestra, which

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST
DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither would, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now.

There are two remaining puzzles, after all these hearings. One is why the conductors fought over it, and the other is why the audiences listen. The first can be answered by the fact that a performance generates publicity like the only Powers model on Guadalcanal — announce the Shostakovich Seventh and the talk begins.

And the second has an answer, too. The public wants to hear what the talk is about. Aside from a well staged demonstration at the American premiere under Toscanini, the applause has been very moderate, and the number of people who walked out on the music at all performances but the first has been larger than normal —even when Serge Koussevitzky gave it the best performance Nev York so far has heard, three weeks ago.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 12 1942

Boston Symphony Here Monday Night

Attendance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Eastman Theater Monday evening, is certain to reach the capacity proportions of former years, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to schedule this musical event until a few days ago.

There is widespread interest in Rochester in the appearance of this celebrated orchestra. And in the program to be performed, as well. That is partially because the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the entire history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

This is true, partly because Shostakovitch poured into the pages of this monumental work what he and his fellow Russians in arms felt in the face of destructive fire aimed at their country.

It is true also because Shostakovitch has wrought a work that possesses the spark of undoubted greatness. Critics hearing the work have disagreed on that point. But none of them denies the excitement produced by the symphony.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than merely guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are all discernible only by those present at an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will present in contrast to the Shostakovitch, one of his favorites among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G. Major, No. 88.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
DEC 11 1942

Audience Enthralled By Boston Symphony

Complimentary Concert in Museum of Art Is Triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky

Super-excellent was the musical fare served up last night by the world-famous Boston Symphony orchestra, playing in the peristyle at the annual concert complimentary to Toledo Museum of Art members.

The audience, numbering among it many of Toledo's most prominent musicians, received the orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with open arms. Time after time applause filled the peristyle, especially following the rendition of Ravel's "Symphonic Fragments from Daphnis and Chloe."

A fresh and resourceful piece of work, the three movements were performed with magnificient interpretation. Shading from stately, measured mood, the orchestra gained crescendo; to clash and resound, shudder and blast in almost terrifying unison; only to lapse into calm lucidity, broken now and again by a clear buoyancy. The audience was delighted; showing its appreciation by twice recalling Dr. Koussesitzky to the podium.

"Corelli's "Suite for Strings" opened the evening's program, with the movements "Sababande, Gigue and Badinerie," attesting to the beauty and clarity of the string instruments; at intervals melodious and muted; then doing an abrupt about-turn to offer contrast in sharp staccatto notes.

Haunting and strange was the second selection, the "Lieutenant Kije Suite, Opus 60," by Prokofieff. Unsurpassed for variations in musical instrumentality, it is concert in a grave mood, a conundrum of notes, scales and bars.

The final scheduled program selection was the Tschaikocsky "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Opus 36."
—B. M.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
DEC 12 1942

"PERENNIAL RUMOR"

Cleveland, Dec. 11.—(UP)—Reports that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would be named conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra next year were denied today by C. W. Spalding, assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is a perennial rumor which has no foundation in fact," Spalding said.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
DEC 11 1942

On Broadway

By Danton Walker

ADMIRAL DARLAN may pay us a visit in the course of personally settling the grievances of the DeGaullists. . . . In London, the feeling is growing that Hitler will attempt an invasion of the British Isles, as a last desperate gesture. . . . In due time, Joe Stalin will come out in praise of our aid in the defense of Stalingrad, revealing the details which must be kept secret now. . . . Mexico is enjoying a building boom, with at least 10 20-story apartment house buildings going up, steel for which is supposed to come from the U. S. for "good will" purposes. . . . Sam Rosoff, the New York subway builder, is tunneling the Mexican mountains for the Pan-American Road from Mexico City to Guatemala, with Uncle Sam donating a bridge between Mexico and that state.

FRANCHOT TONE.

★ ★ ★

BURTON TURKUS, the nemesis of Murder, Inc., is slated to be appointed Special Prosecutor for Brooklyn by Gov. Dewey. . . . New Jersey bookmakers are said to be paying as high as $1000 apiece for the use of telephone numbers. . . . Uncle Sam is doing a better job of ridding Broadway of the bookies than Butch LaGuardia—more than half of them have departed for the draft. . . . Big music bookers insist that their band leaders won't be affected by the salary ceiling, claiming that Government executives have already ruled in their favor. . . . Franchot Tone's walkout on "Old Acquaintance," because of the salary ceiling may have lost him the juiciest role of the year at Warners—that of George Gershwin, in the biographical film based on the composer's life (last we heard, John Garfield was to get the role.)

★ ★ ★

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is slated to succeed John Barbirolli as chief conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony next year . . . Pola Negri's indebtedness to Mr. Whiskers for back taxes runs into six figures, and her other creditors include Prince David Mdivani and Helena Rubenstein. . . . Doris Duke Cromwell, who once studied tap dancing under Bill Robinson, is now taking piano lessons from Garland Wilson at Cerutti's and rumba lessons from Tony De Marco. Getting ready for the night shift? . . . Bette Davis is the most likely candidate to portray Bette Davis in "The Life of Bette Davis," which is something new under the celluloid sun. . . . Orson Welles, whose continuance in the movies is rated more important to "morale" than his presence in the armed services, draws the male lead opposite Joan Fontaine in 20th Century's "Jane Eyre," upon which Aldous Huxley is now putting the finishing touches.

★ ★ ★

NBC HAS ORDERED performers to refrain from describing the Japs as "yellow," since our friends the Chinese are likewise members of the Yellow Race. . . . Labor organizations and unions plan to establish servicemen's canteens from coast to coast. . . . Busboys and waiters are being flown from here to Panama to serve Government contractors. . . . Restaurant prices will soon be fixed by Government order. . . . Almost a third of New York's doctors are in the armed forces. . . . So many anti-Nazi movies are being turned out that Hollywood has run into a new "priority," on German uniforms. . . . The Artie Shaws (Betty Kern) will be three by spring.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
DEC 11 1942

Boston Orchestra Leaves Memories For Music Lovers

Dr. Koussevitzky Highly Praised For His Direction and Variety

By ARTHUR PETERSON

War and all the other vexations that await the promised progression into a satisfactory last chord may claim the whole attention of the Toledo Koussevitzkyites again. The annual big evening with the Boston sorcerer is a fact accomplished. The Peristyle has another memory to take into its 10th year.

The concert last night was felicity compounded, splendid music splendidly received, and if there is a seamy side to remember, it is only this — that Koussevitzkyites outside the Museum's membership were not eligible for seats.

Is it ordained that another war year will leave us with any symphony orchestras and the margin over taxes to patronize them? Will Dr. Koussevitzky then be at his present post? Depending upon what portents it may find in its tea cup, the Museum might consider the feasibility of a two-night stand for the Bostonians the next time—one night for the members and one night for the box office. That ought to make two crowds.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky is the sort of conductor who could coax music out of a row of empty chairs, there is not much point in going deeply into the degree of his accomplishment last night with the many rows of chairs filled by musicians

This Clipping From ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

Boston Symp In Shostako

By Leonard S. Gregory

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in Hill auditorium last evening for the sixth Choral Union concert.

The program, though limited to two works, was by no means brief in duration. Opening with the attractive little symphony in G major, No. 88 of Haydn, it concluded with the new symphony No. 7 of Dmitri Shostakovich.

If a performance of Haydn has ever equalled that of last night, it is safe to say that one has never surpassed it. Such co-ordination, such meticulous precision are well nigh impossible to describe.

As much as the writer has admired the quality of the Boston string section, he has never heard it so closely approach such proximity to a single virtuoso. And as for the other choirs in the orchestra equal commendation can honestly be expressed.

After traversing the first three movements of the work without so much as a note astray, Dr. Kous-

SERVICE RING

EASY TERMS
Complete with Chains $4.95
OF LOCKETS
MOND CROSSES

Boston Symp

Koussevitzky's Program Lists Soviet Work

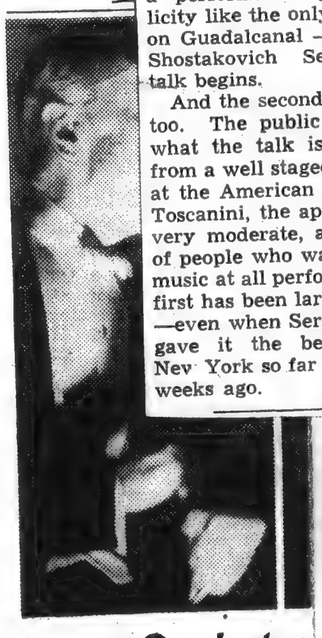
A NOVEL experience is awaiting Rochester music lovers tomorrow evening in the Eastman Theater.

It is not only the concert to be given by the world's finest orchestra, the Boston Symphony, but the fact that the featured work is to be the Seventh Symphony, by Soviet Russia's Dmitri Shostakovitch.

Seldom in the history of music has a new symphony presented such a challenge to the orchestral conductors of the nation. Almost every important director has felt called upon to present the latest work from the pen of the irrepressible Shostakovitch.

Those who have heard the symphony presented in a concert hall state that its brilliance cannot be more than guessed from a radio performance. The dynamic proportions, its extravagant harmonic structure are discernable only by those present an actual performance.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphon will present in contrast to Shostakovitch, one of his favorite among the many works of Haydn —the Symphony in G Major, No. 88.



Famous Conductor

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky phony Orchestra, which [14]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 15 1942

Boston Conductor Hails Russ Relief

The work of the Rochester Committee for Russian War Relief yesterday was commended by one of the most active and distinguished backers of the project, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

According to Dr. Howard Hansen, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Koussevitsky, who last night conducted the world famous Boston orchestra in its annual Eastman Theater concert, the eminent musician sent a warm message of appreciation to the local committee for its effective work in behalf of his invaded native country.

This Clipping From MONROVIA, CALIF.
NEWS-POST
DEC 16 1942

How Goes the World

By AUSTIN CONOVER

THE SHOSTAKOVITCH PUZZLE—Three times in New York last week the Shostakovich Seventh symphony was performed, bringing to a head a controversy over this most written about of all modern symphonies.

Up to last week, the symphony had had two New York performances in Carnegie Hall and one in Rockefeller Center.

Before the first hearing late last summer under Toscanini the symphony had been played in Russia, photographed on microfilm, sped to these shores by motor, plane and similar gadgets and yearned over by every American conductor.

There was an exchange of cables and wireless messages between the composer and numerous persons on this side, and the composer himself was asked to fly to America for the premiere, or failing that to send the Russian conductor who had the honor of the world premiere. Neither would, or perhaps neither could. Russia is very busy right now.

There are two remaining puzzles, after all these hearings. One is why the conductors fought over it, and the other is why the audiences listen. The first can be answered by the fact that a performance generates publicity like the only Powers model on Guadalcanal — announce the Shostakovich Seventh and the talk begins.

And the second has an answer, too. The public wants to hear what the talk is about. Aside from a well staged demonstration at the American premiere under Toscanini, the applause has been very moderate, and the number of people who walked out on the music at all performances but the first has been larger than normal —even when Serge Koussevitzky gave it the best performance Nev York so far has heard, three weeks ago.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

DEC 14 1942

But Boston Orchestra Is Top Rank

Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony Disappoints

Critic Wonders If Much-Acclaimed Soviet Work Will Hold Fame in Distant Future

By Donald Steinfirst

Pittsburgh had its first hearing of the now famous Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch on Saturday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra included it in the first of two memorable concerts given at Syria Mosque under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

No work of music in modern times has received such publicity as this Symphony written by a musician of undoubted ability who was inspired by the flaming defense of Leningrad. The whole world attended in absentia the birth pains of the Symphony in Russia, its enormous success there and elsewhere in Europe, its subsequent trip via microfilm to America, the rather undignified race between some of our leading conductors for the honor of the first American performance. The whole world, too, thrilled to the simultaneous magnificent defense of Leningrad and the majestic attainments of the Russian soldier and peoples throughout their hours of travail. And yet at the risk of being declared a Fifth Columnist, candor compels us to state that, after three hearings, the Shostakovitch Seventh Symphony is something less than the musical masterpiece it has been declared. In fact, we wonder if it will not fall into the pattern formed by so many symphonic works likewise inspired by political events. One immediately recalls Beethoven and his "Wellington's Victory" Symphony. When the news of the great French defeat at Vittoria reached Vienna in July of 1813, Beethoven, always on the side of Freedom, straightway produced this "Battle" Symphony to great acclaim. In England it was played nightly, and then as the political significance faded, the music faded, too. Today it is never heard. The history of music is studded with similar events. Will the Shostakovitch Seventh follow this trend?

Aside from the tremendous crescendo at the end of the first movement which has its start in a kernel of a march theme over drums (and this in itself is borrowed from Ravel's Bolero) and a great climax at the very end, the Symphony is often barren and dull. The many empty spaces of the second movement and almost the entire third movement hold little or no musical values, unless of course, one is willing to accept program music per se without an underlying honest musical achievement. This is not to say that there are not some fine moments but practically all the composer has to say is finished when he has reached the end of the first movement. This in itself is a symphony. Nearly all that follows could be safely excised.

Haydn Work Exquisitely Played

Preceding the Shostakovitch on Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky played Haydn's G Major Symphony No. 88 as exquisitely and cheerfully as we have ever heard a Symphony played. What attention to minute details, what refinement in tone, particularly string tone, what rustic humor in the last movement dance, what effects Dr. Koussevitzky gets with his virtuoso group. This little Haydn Symphony is 150 years old. Will the Shostakovitch 7th be heard in the year 2092?

The great elements that go to make the Boston Symphony Orchestra the first Symphony in the land were all revealed in yesterday's matinee. There was technical perfection, tonal eloquence and interpretative authority in every work played. To begin, there was the delicious music of Corelli's Suite for strings with shimmering tone. This is music of the elegant era, a slow Sarabande, a gay little Gigue where the conductor did not hesitate to use rubato to get the eeffct he wanted and the Badineria played piano throughout.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite which followed is still as clever and witty as when it was first heard several years ago. This is descriptive music that is more than veneer. The pompous imaginary Lieutenant comes to life as the Suite unfolds in a more than superficial manner. After the performance yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky paid special tribute to several soloists particularly the tenor saxaphone, the principal double bass and the off-stage trumpet.

Performance to Treasure

The crowning achievement of the two-day visit of the Orchestra, for this listener at least, was the "Daphnis and Chloe" of Ravel, one of the Bostonian's classic accomplishments in tone color. Here again, Dr. Koussevitzky worked one of his miracles. Restraint was thrown to the winds. Each choir of the orchestra felt the conductorial impact until at the end of the General Dance, there was a crescendo and concluding climax that fairly lifted the audience out of its collective seat. This was a performance to treasure in the memory.

True to its usual custom, the concert concluded with a Tschaikowsky Symphony, in this case, the Fourth. The visiting orchestras have played Symphonies of Tschaikowsky continuously for the last five years and the Miaskovsky Symphony which was originally scheduled would have been most welcome. However, Dr. Koussevitzky and his men played with unusual restraint and the audience was most appreciative.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION

DEC 15 1942

Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Given Ovation

By A. J. WARNER

The annual visits of the Boston Symphony and its distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have been the apex of Rochester's musical privileges, and there was great disappointment when circumstances seemed to make it impossible for them to come this season. Suddenly the situation cleared, and last night Boston's unrivaled orchestra returned to the Eastman Theater, to the delight of an audience which, although of less than the capacity size that in past years has become "traditional," gave Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians an ovation of historic proportions.

The program included but two works—Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88, and the controversial Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch, Russia's man-of-the-hour musically, the first American performance of which was given by a radio broadcast of the NBC Orchestra, Toscanini conducting, on July 19, last, while the first concert performance in this country took place at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, on August 14, with Dr. Koussevitzky directing the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at a Russian benefit. London heard it as early as June 29 at a Promenade Concert under the baton of Sir Henry Wood and the symphony was performed in Leningrad on August 9.

Full Splendor of Resources

Shostakovitch dedicated his Seventh Symphony to "the ordinary citizen of Leningrad," where he wrote it during the bombardment of the city. In his own words the composer has explained that the work was composed to illustrate the way in which war affects human beings. That it is all but impossible to forget the intensely dramatic circumstances in which this music came into existence seems incontrovertible, for it has been fixed in the imagination as an expression in music of the magnificent resistance of the Russian people against the Nazi hordes. Hearing it thus becomes at once an experience and an emotional outlet.

Last night's performance let loose the full splendor of the orchestra's glorious resources, and Dr. Koussevitzky brought to the symphony's interpretation an enkindling quality of imagination, a sensitivity and a compelling intensity that were in themselves thrilling. The tonal magnificence, though always kept within the bounds of sonority capable of absorption by the human ear, was overwhelming, each climax seeming to outstrip its predecessor in an almost unbearable surge of sound, while in the work's lyrical moments there were exquisite examples of solo playing—such as the scarcely audible tattoo on the snare drum, or the bassoon's mourning notes over the death of Russia's heroes, or the passages by the flutes and the dialogue between the oboe and the bassoon, the orchestra throughout the performance living up to its reputation of being the Stradivarius of all orchestras, which the Boston Symphony is beyond question.

Superb Performance

Although it is part of the wonder of the language of music that it speaks differently to each listener, one may, perhaps, for the sake of the record, recall that the consensus of critical opinion, both in London and New York, pronounced the Seventh Symphony as less fine than the same composer's first, fifth and sixth symphonies, Olin Downes, the eminent critic of the New York Times summing up that consensus to the effect that the Shostakovich Seventh was "a work puffed and cannonaded into public attention for purposes of political propaganda; that the enormous publicity it received in advance gave it a fictitious value for conductors and audiences, and that, inherently, the composition was inexcusably long, superficial in its contents, poorly put together and highly derivative from the music of other composers who had thoughtlessly anticipated Mr. Shostakovitch's utterances; that, in short, its pretensions far exceeded its manufactured reputation and actual merit." This, Mr. Downes has stated, is a fair summation of informed American and European opinion of Shostakovich's latest published symphony.

Only history can prove the accuracy of the above consensus. There was no mistaking, however, the profound impression last night's superb performance made on the audience. And by playing the symphony the great orchestra from Boston continued to function not only as a custodian of established masterworks, but as a herald and prophet of the new.

The Haydn Symphony was pure joy—utter perfection in the clarity of detail, in the feeling for nuance, and in the flawless euphony that marked its performance. Once again the distinction of the orchestra's instrumental utterance filled one with wonder and delight.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the Blue Network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor — it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

DEC 18 1942

EDWARD LARSON

YOUTH CONCERT ENJOYED

The second Youth Concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Wednesday, Dec. 16, before a large appreciative audience of high school pupils including 30 Q. H. S. boys and girls.

The program consisted of the "Symphony in D Minor" by Cesar Franck, "The Afternoon of a Faun" by Claude Debussy, and "The Bartered Bride" by Friedrick Smetana.

The concerts are prepared especially for the young people to give them opportunity to hear beautiful music at low cost. The conductor, Wheeler Beckett, has great skill in interpreting and expressing the feeling of the music. At the beginning of each piece of music, he gives a description of the theme of the work. Then he has the orchestra play the theme so that the young people can listen for it and hear it throughout the composition.

The members of the audience at the Youth Concerts automatically become members of the Symphony club, the objective of which is to spread the knowledge and enjoyment of symphony music.

Some parents seem to think that music is a frivolity which school children should forget at this time. But music is needed more than

This Clipping From ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN

DEC 18 1942

All Seats for Free Concert Are Taken

BOSTON, (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p m, the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsy.

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN

DEC

MUSIC

The Monk of

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony Society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dmitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

...ny Concert Rouses ...er Audience

...MAN NAIRN

...rchestra that plays as stunningly ...?

...itzky and his musicians to Roch... sound music. Concerts by the more gorgeous outpouring of tone than came in the second movement (largo), in the nature of a chorale prelude, the theme of which has since been used as a hymn. In the Finale Haydn again is in high spirits, full of lively sallies, all the instruments gathering together for a grand frolic in which the symphony ends.

It was another concert long to be remembered, as usually are all by the Boston Symphony.

Maybe it was my imagination, but I thought Dr. Koussevitzky's slower tempo in leading the audience in the Star Spangled Banner lent itself to more heartfelt ensemble singing than usually is evident.

Note to Arthur M. See: Many people in the audience would appreciate it if the Eastman mechanics were turned loose to eliminate that rattle in the blower system, which was particularly noticeable in all the soft work of the orchestra.

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

DEC 18 1942

FREE SYMPHONY TICKETS GO

BOSTON, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 P. M., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the Thirty-fourth Symphony of Mozart, and the Fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

DEC 13 1942

Servicemen To Hear Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3.30 PM the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

[15]

Treat yourself today, j a very special "buy" o at the Younger Set Sho pretty in their Gay colo
mas red, heaven blue, and gold. Two-piece with bright embroidery trimmed with fringe. rayon crepe. Sizes 9 to phone orders. Gimbel

4.45 for the Youn

Bright

Special V

of ph Sa Sh ev ti ha

o Rank

Seventh appoints

n-Acclaimed Soviet in Distant Future soloists particularly the tenor aphone, the principal double s and the off-stage trumpet.

rformance to Treasure

The crowning achievement of the o-day visit of the Orchestra, this listener at least, was the aphnis and Chloe" of Ravel, one the Bostonian's classic accomshments in tone color. Here ain, Dr. Koussevitzky worked e of his miracles. Restraint was rown to the winds. Each choir of he orchestra felt the conductorial npact until at the end of the eneral Dance, there was a cresendo and concluding climax that irly lifted the audience out of s collective seat. This was a perormance to treasure in the emory.

True to its usual custom, the oncert concluded with a Tschaikowsky Symphony, in this case, he Fourth. The visiting orchestras ave played Symphonies of Tschaikowsky continuously for the last e years and the Miaskovsky mphony which was originally heduled would have been most elcome. However, Dr. Koussetzky and his men played with usual restraint and the audience was most appreciative.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
DEC 15 1942

Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Given Ovation

By A. J. WARNER

The annual visits of the Boston Symphony and its distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, have been the apex of Rochester's musical privileges, and there was great disappointment when circumstances seemed to make it impossible for them to come this season. Suddenly the situation cleared, and last night Boston's unrivaled orchestra returned to the Eastman Theater, to the delight of an audience which, although of less than the capacity size that in past years has become "traditional," gave Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians an ovation of historic proportions.

The program included but two works—Haydn's Symphony in G, No. 88, and the controversial Seventh Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch, Russia's man-of-the-hour musically, the first American performance of which was given by a radio broadcast of the NBC Orchestra, Toscanini conducting, on July 19, last, while the first concert performance in this country took place at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, on August 14, with Dr. Koussevitzky directing the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at a Russian benefit. London heard it as early as June 29 at a Promenade Concert under the baton of Sir Henry Wood and the symphony was performed in Leningrad on August 9.

Full Splendor of Resources

Shostakovitch dedicated his Seventh Symphony to "the ordinary citizen of Leningrad," where he wrote it during the bombardment of the city. In his own words the composer has explained that the work was composed to illustrate the way in which war affects human beings. That it is all but impossible to forget the intensely dramatic circumstances in which this music came into existence seems incontrovertible, for it has been fixed in the imagination as an expression in music of the magnificent resistance of the Russian people against the Nazi hordes. Hearing it thus becomes at once an experience and an emotional outlet.

Last night's performance let loose the full splendor of the orchestra's glorious resources, and Dr. Koussevitzky brought to the symphony's interpretation an enkindling quality of imagination, a sensitivity and a compelling intensity that were in themselves thrilling. The tonal magnificence, though always kept within the bounds of sonority capable of absorption by the human ear, was overwhelming, each climax seeming to outstrip its predecessor in

GIFT $2.98 T
RY
GIFT $5.98 T
Warm, cozy ra cotton quilts. textured rayo nels and lov
crepes.

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
DEC 18 1942

EDWARD LARSON

YOUTH CONCERT ENJOYED

The second Youth Concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given Wednesday, Dec. 16, before a large appreciative audience of high school pupils including 30 Q. H. S. boys and girls.

The program consisted of the "Symphony in D Minor" by Cesar Franck, "The Afternoon of a Faun" by Claude Debussy, and "The Bartered Bride" by Friedrick Smetana.

The concerts are prepared especially for the young people to give them opportunity to hear beautiful music at low cost. The conductor, Wheeler Beckett, has great skill in interpreting and expressing the feeling of the music. At the beginning of each piece of music, he gives a description of the theme of the work. Then he has the orchestra play the theme so that the young people can listen for it and hear it throughout the composition.

The members of the audience at the Youth Concerts automatically become members of the Symphony club, the objective of which is to spread the knowledge and enjoyment of symphony music.

Some parents seem to think that music is a frivolity which school children should forget at this time. But music is needed more than

This Clipping From ATTLEBORO, MASS.
SUN
DEC 18 1942

All Seats for Free Concert Are Taken

BOSTON, (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p m, the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsy.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
DEC 15 1942

Boston Symphony Concert Rouses Eastman Theater Audience

By NORMAN NAIRN

WHERE is there another orchestra that plays as stunningly as the Boston Symphony?

A visit by Serge Koussevitzky and his musicians to Rochester is a new adventure in sound music. Concerts by the "Boston" usually have been exciting musical experiences, but none, to this reviewer at least, as exciting as their appearance last night in the Eastman Theater. At the conclusion of the much discussed Seventh Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovitch the audience rose to its feet to pay tribute to a great conductor, a great orchestra, and a great composer.

Now that the two-year-old battle to unionize the Boston Symphony has been settled, we are grateful once again that this orchestra without a peer can visit Rochester without fear of the sponsoring organization incurring the wrath of unionists. The settlement came as the result of concessions by both orchestra and union, and means the orchestra can resume its broadcasting and recordings, both of which had been barred by the Musicians Union.

'Blitz' Symphony Stunning

Rochester had its first opportunity to hear at first hand the new and prodigious Leningrad or "Blitz" symphony by Shostakovitch, the desire to listen being heightened by the discussion created by the work, as well as because all things Russian are now in high favor. In the words of the composer, the symphony depicts the peaceful Russian life disrupted by war, the early retreat of the Red Army and then a crescendo of victory.

Once before a Russian rout of the invader has served as the theme for classical music. Tschaikowsky basing his "1812 Overture" on Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. But that music was written about a half century after the event which inspired it, whereas Shostakovitch's was composed "on the spot," under a constant rain of bombs and to the accompaniment of the booming of anti-aircraft guns. The Soviet composer wrote it in his native city of Leningrad when Hitler's hordes were tearing at the city's gates, Shostakovitch serving as a fire fighter in the People's Volunteer Army.

Dr. Koussevitzky's opinion is that in the Seventh Symphony Shostakovitch has presented "the greatest appeal to the masses of any composer since Beethoven." It was perfectly apparent that he was wrapped up in it last night

It is a stunning, a colossal score, with a wealth of dramatic detail, some audacities and an emotional impact that is well nigh overwhelming. Dr. Koussevitzky's genius for inspiring his men to great things was never here more strikingly evident. Here again were tonal sumptuousness, fortissimo climaxes that were impelling and yet ever musical, string tone as lovely as always in silken transparency and delicacy.

Haydn Music Superlative

Dr. Koussevitzky preceded the heroic Shostakovitch with one of the most charming of the Haydn symphonies, Number 88 in G major. If I'm not mistaken, the Boston Symphony played this lovely work here on its last visit.

Superlatives are in order. It would be impossible to imagine any more gorgeous outpouring of tone than came in the second movement (largo), in the nature of a chorale prelude, the theme of which has since been used as a hymn. In the Finale Haydn again is in high spirits, full of lively sallies, all the instruments gathering together for a grand frolic in which the symphony ends.

It was another concert long to be remembered, as usually are all by the Boston Symphony.

Maybe it was my imagination, but I thought Dr. Koussevitzky's slower tempo in leading the audience in the Star Spangled Banner lent itself to more heartfelt ensemble singing than usually is evident.

Note to Arthur M. See: Many people in the audience would appreciate it if the Eastman mechanics were turned loose to eliminate that rattle in the blower system, which was particularly noticeable in all the soft work of the orchestra.

This Clipping From KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
DEC 1

MUSIC

The Monk of Minneapolis

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

New York—Beginning this week, the venerable Philharmonic-Symphony Society is in for a series of electric shocks. Dmitri Mitropoulos has taken over the orchestra for a month.

Mitropoulos it is who vibrates instead of making gestures on the podium. When he really lets go, his whole body seems to twang in the air, like a taut violin string. Before an audience he is the personification of strength and passion and iron will.

Off stage he is the opposite. He is so quiet that the inside of a telephone booth at five of a morning seems noisy by contrast. He wears black suits by preference, and usually a black sweater underneath. His socks are black and his shoes as well. He seems thin to the point of frailty, and his slender face and almost bald head accentuate the impression.

In his native Greece he just missed being a priest, and when you talk with him you can understand that he didn't miss by much. Music is a kind of religious frenzy with him. He is devoted only to it, and sacrifices everything to it. At home in Minneapolis he lives in a bare little room, goes out socially almost never, spends free time in the movies.

Although he does a yearly stint with the Philharmonic, he won't consider coming East to take it over. The board of directors some years ago decided to divide the season three ways, and offered Mitropoulos a third. Even that was too much.

"A musician has to stop and clean himself," says the monk of Minneapolis. "If he does not, the dirt collects on him until finally he is not fit for his job. It is too much to rehearse and conduct four concerts a week."

To make Mitropoulos' return all the more brilliant, his Thursday-Friday programs are being shared with Sergei Rachmaninoff. They make an odd pair—Rachmaninoff the height of chill dignity on the stage; Mitropoulos apparently about to leap off it, altogether.

The Boston Symphony is still behind the musical eight-ball.

It is duly unionized, on terms that pleased both Koussevitzky and Petrillo. It is returning to the radio December 26 on the Blue Network. Any musician can play with the orchestra now, and the orchestra can play in any hall without fear of strikes. Lastly, it has renewed its old recording contract with RCA-Victor — it lapsed perforce when the union situation boiled over.

Still, Petrillo stands in the way. Nobody can make records just yet, not even Dr. Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
DEC 18 1942

FREE SYMPHONY TICKETS GO

BOSTON, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 P. M., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the Thirty-fourth Symphony of Mozart, and the Fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
DEC 18 1942

Servicemen To Hear Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3.30 PM the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

[15]

THIS CLIPPING FROM BARRE, VT.
TIMES
DEC 18 1942

EVERY SEAT TAKEN

For Free Boston Symphony Concert For Services

Boston, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p. m., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikowsky.

This Clipping From GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
DEC 18 1942

for weekly troop meetings.

EXHAUST FREE SEATS

BOSTON — (AP) — All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p. m., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 18 1942

SYMPHONY 'SOLD OUT'

BOSTON, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

This Clipping From SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 18 1942

Symphony Concert Seats Taken for Armed Forces Show

Boston, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 P. M., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
DEC 18 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 18.—(A.P.)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

[16]

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
POST
DEC 19 1942

The Charioteers have been renewed on the Crosby program. . . .

Bob Hope treking back to the coast. . . .

Boston Symphony has been signed by Victor records to a contract effective when the present recording ban is lifted.

Public utility program tees off Sunday, Jan. 10, over 126 stations of NBC at 2:30 p. m. . . .

Sammy Kaye's "Sunday Serenade" will therefore be moved down to 1:30 p. m., and U. of Chicago "Round Table" will be aired at 2 p. m.

This Clipping From POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
DEC 19 1942

CAN THIS BE TRUE?—The rumor is rampant around town, at present, that next year the permanent conductor of our Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will be the great Serge Koussevitzky, currently boss of the Boston Symphony and the musical idol of the Hub. I can hardly believe this is true, because I just can't imagine the American Athens letting Koussy get away. They worship him there.

(Copyright 1942, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 19 1942

CHRISTMAS SCARVES—One of the most popular of the year's Christmas gifts here is the scarf—suddenly one of the most important accessories there is. Some are woolly and warm — others are snooty and glamourous in black lace. All, somehow, are eminently practical, for when they are not worn about the throat they are also used as turbans, or even sashes. Can't go wrong with a scarf, now.

\+ + +

CAN THIS BE TRUE?—The rumor is rampant around town, at present, that next year the permanent conductor of our Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will be the great Serge Koussevitzky, currently boss of the Boston Symphony and the musical idol of the Hub. I can hardly believe this is true, because I just can't imagine the American Athens letting Koussy get away. They worship him there.

(Copyright, 1942, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD-STATESMAN
DEC 19 1942

Koussevitsky 'Books' Choral

Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited the Sarah Lawrence College chorus to sing with the orchestra on the evening of Jan. 7 and the afternoon of Jan. 9 at Carnegie Hall in New York, it has been announced. About 55 girls will participate in the selection, "Blessed Damozel," by Debussy.

While Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Mass., has sung the same number with the orchestra and the Harvard Glee Club has appeared at various times under Koussevitsky's direction, Sarah Lawrence is the first college outside of the Boston vicinity to sing with the orchestra, according to a college spokesman.

This Clipping From MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS
DEC 19 1942

Can This Be True? The rumor is rampant around town, at present, that next year the permanent conductor of our Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will be the great Serge Koussevitzky, currently boss of the Boston Symphony and the musical idol of the Hub. I can hardly believe this is true, because I just can't imagine the American Athens letting Koussy get away. They worship him there.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUNDAY TRIBUNE
12/20/42

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
DEC 21 1942

2000 in Armed Forces Hear Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—About 2000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and the Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
DEC 21 1942

SERVICE MEN AT SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained Sunday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the army and the navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
DEC 21 1942

THOUSANDS AT CONCERT

BOSTON, Dec. 21, (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and the Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 21 1942

Service Concert Draws 2,000

Boston, Dec. 20—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra played today for about 2,000 men and women of the armed forces and their companions in a free concert. Another such program will be announced soon.

The audience—officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and Navy—sang "The Star Spangled Banner" lustily at the beginning and called back Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, time and again at the close.

Koussevitzky, who had his 105 musicians stand to share the tribute, told his military audience:

"You are defending our country and our liberties. We, in our way, are soldiers. We are defending the high art of music, and, when you return to your homes, you will find [illegible]"

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
DEC 20 1942

'Just as a Matter of Records'

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, has signed a long-term contract to make Victor recordings, it was announced last week by Frank B. Walker, vice-president of RCA-Victor.

The contract also calls for the exclusive recording performances of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler as conductor.

Just 25 years ago, the first Victor records of the Boston Symphony were released. These discs were history-making in the phonograph art, because for the first time an orchestra of 100 men was recorded. Up to this time, the size of an orchestra for records was limited to 40 men.

The first records of the Boston Symphony, which then was directed by Dr. Karl Muck, were three single-face discs. They were the Finale of the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4, on two records, and the Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin.

The first recordings of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony were history-making also. Recorded in November of 1928, they were the first orthophonic records to be produced, and they ushered in a completely new conception of high quality sound-on-disc recording and reproduction for the home.

Since 1917 the records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have sold in the millions. With Dr. Koussevitzky as conductor, the orchestra's records attained even

This Clipping From BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES
DEC 21 1942

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—(AP)—About 2000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained Sunday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the army and navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
HERALD
DEC 21 1942

Late News Flashes

BOSTON, Dec. 21, (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

HOLIDAY MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Boston Post- Dec. 25 1942

Orchestra Will Broadcast Tomorrow Night

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

This week's Symphony programme, which received its first hearing yesterday afternoon, has distinctly a holiday flavor, though there are no seasonal allusions. The first hour of it was also designed for the radio audience, since a new series of broadcasts over 145 stations of the Blue Network will be inaugurated tomorrow evening. We have here one of the fruits of the orchestra's new union status.

Two numbers comprise the section to be broadcast, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and the Fifth of Beethoven. What the radio listeners will not get is a brace of numbers by Rimsky-Korsakov, the "Night on Mount Triglav" (the concert arrangement of Act Three of the opera-ballet "Mlada") and the more familiar "Spanish Caprice." It is interesting to note that the three performances of the "Mlada" excerpt at Symphony Hall, in 1921, '33 and '35, have all taken place at what might be called the Christmas concerts.

Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony wears well, which is fortunate since it receives a good deal of attention in these parts; we were hearing it only last March. Here as elsewhere, Prokofieff proves that he has invention as well as craftsmanship and that is one reason why his music will outlast that of most of his contemporaries. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra always do this little work to a turn. There was a time when the conductor treated the Beethoven Fifth pretty freely. Yesterday's performance might be described as orthodox, though that does not mean that it was lacking in eloquence. Only a slight broadening of the tempo at the beginning of the finale, and at the return of these measures, savored of wilful interpretation. Dr. Koussevitzky was here sacrificing excitement for the sake of impressiveness. Incidentally, this is the first time the Fifth has been played at these concerts since its initial notes became the symbol of "V for Victory."

It might be said of the "Mlada" scene that, while far from being a masterpiece, it is nevertheless the work of a master. Like many another page of music designed to accompany scene and action, it is put at a disadvantage in the concert hall. The beginning and the end are plainly theatre music, and when there is nothing to look at they seem a little empty. In the middle, however, there is plenty going on, including an amusing anticipation of the Infernal Dance of the Subjects of Kastchei in Stravinsky's "Fire Bird."

Mr. Burk's notes reminded us that when Rimsky wrote this music in the spring of 1889 his mind was full of Wagner's "Ring," which had recently been introduced to St. Petersburg by our old friend Dr. Karl Muck. Not only is there a hint of Wagnerian sumptuousness in what was for Rimsky an unusually elaborate orchestral setting, but the prying ear may also detect a quotation from the "Ring," namely, the Fate Motive. Since this music depends so much on sheer richness of sound, it was fortunate yesterday in its performers. Richness of sound and Boston Symphony have long been synonymous terms. It was, in fact, an afternoon of superlative playing, with an exceedingly brilliant performance of the "Capriccio" for suitable conclusion.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 21 1942

OVERT

A large and enthusiastic audience clad in mufti, yesterday heard works of Brahms, Beethoven, Bach, Mozart and Sibelius performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The performance took place at Fort Devens, Mass., as a special Sunday afternoon feature of the musical life at the fort.

C. W. Stockbridge, Cellist, Dies

Dec 22 '42 Globe

Carl Wales Stockbridge, 59, cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died last evening at the Faulkner Hospital. He was stricken Thursday morning at Symphony Hall after playing the usual rehearsal with the orchestra and was unable to play a concert at Saunders Theatre, Cambridge, that evening. His home was at 28 Sunset Hill road, West Roxbury.

Stockbridge was born in Dedham, a descendant of the first settlers of Scituate. His father, who taught him to play the cello, was Arthur Beauvais Stockbridge of Somerville, a member of the Boston Symphony when it was founded in 1881.

His mother was Amalia Aberg, a noted opera singer and pianist. His brother, Arthur, was a violinist with the Boston Opera and Philadelphia symphony orchestras and the family often played together in concerts. Stockbridge also was a member of the Aeolians, a chamber music group which gave concerts throughout New England for the last seven or eight years.

Stockbridge joined the Boston Symphony in 1918 under the directorship of Henri Rabaud.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Catherine F. Stockbridge, and a daughter, Mrs. Thomas Elie of Wellesley. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Stockbridge, Cellist With Symphony, Dies

Dec 22

Carl Wales Stockbridge of 28 Sunset Hill road, Roslindale, 59, 'cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died yesterday at the Faulkner Hospital after a brief illness. He was suddenly taken ill Thursday at the conclusion of the orchestra's regular rehearsal.

He was born in Hyde Park, the son of Arthur B. Stockbridge, 'cellist with the Boston Symphony at its founding, and Amalia Aberg, Swedish opera singer. His brother also was a distinguished musician.

He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1918, under the conductorship of Henri Rabaud, and had served there since. He was also a member of the Aeolian Quartet.

His widow, Mrs. Catherine F. Stockbridge, survives, as well as a daughter, Mrs. Thomas Elie of Wellesley.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 3:30 P.M., from the Waterman Chapel, 495 Commonwealth avenue.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BARRE, VT.
TIMES
DEC 18 19

EVERY SEA

For Free Boston Symp- cert For Services

Boston, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p. m., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikowsky.

This Clipping From GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER-GAZETTE
DEC 18 1942

for weekly troop meetings.

EXHAUST FREE SEATS

BOSTON — (AP) — All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 p. m., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 18 1942

SYMPHONY 'SOLD OUT'

BOSTON, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the management announced today.

This Clipping From SALEM, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 18 1942

Symphony Concert Seats Taken for Armed Forces Show

Boston, Dec. 18 (AP)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

So great was the demand for tickets that the management has decided to give another free concert at a later date.

This Sunday, starting at 3:30 P. M., the 105 musicians of the orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will perform the 34th symphony of Mozart, and the fourth of Tchaikovsky.

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
DEC 18 1942

BOSTON, Dec. 18.—(A.P.)—All seats have been taken for the free concert for men and women of the armed forces which members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will give this Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, the management announced today.

[16]

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
POST
DEC 19 1942

down to at 2 p. m.

This Clipping From POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
DEC 19 1942

CAN THIS BE TRUE?—The rumor is rampant around town, at present, that next year the permanent conductor of our Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will be the great Serge Koussevitzky, currently boss of the Boston Symphony and the musical idol of the Hub. I can hardly believe this is true, because, I just can't imagine the American Athens letting Koussy get away. They worship him there.

(Copyright 1942, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
DEC 1942

CHRISTMAS SCARVES—One of the most popular of the year's Christmas gifts here is the scarf—suddenly one of the most important accessories there is. Some are woolly and warm — others are snooty and glamourous in black lace. All, somehow, are eminently practical, for when they are not worn about the throat they are also used as turbans, or even sashes. Can't go wrong with a scarf, now.

+ + +

CAN THIS BE TRUE?—The rumor is rampant around town, at present, that next year the permanent conductor of our Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will be the great Serge Koussevitzky, currently boss of the Boston Symphony and the musical idol of the Hub. I can hardly believe this is true, because I just can't imagine the American Athens letting Koussy get away. They worship him there.

(Copyright, 1942, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
YONKERS, N. Y.
HERALD-STATESMAN
DEC 19 1942

Koussevitsky 'Books' Choral

Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited the Sarah Lawrence College chorus to sing with the orchestra on the evening of Jan. 7 and the afternoon of Jan. 9 at Carnegie Hall in New York, it has been announced. About 55 girls will participate in the selection, "Blessed Damozel," by Debussy.

While Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Mass., has sung the same number with the orchestra and the Harvard Glee Club has appeared at various times under Koussevitsky's direction, Sarah Lawrence is the first college outside of the Boston vicinity to sing with the orchestra, according to a college spokesman.

This Clipping From MANKATO, MINN.
FREE PRESS
DEC 19 1942

Can This present rampant around town, conductor of our Philh Serge Koussevitzky, c
the cause I just can't imag way. They worship

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUNDAY TRIBUNE
12/20/42

Victor has a Bostonian feather in its recording cap, having celebrated the signing of a peace treaty between the Boston orchestra and the musicians' union by capturing Serge Koussevitzky and his brilliant crew on exclusive contract. Victor also will record the Boston "Pops" under Arthur Fiedler.—C. C.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
DEC 21 1942

2000 in Armed Forces Hear Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—About 2000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and the Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
DEC 21 1942

SERVICE MEN AT SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Dec. 21 (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained Sunday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the army and the navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
1942

THOUSANDS AT CONCERT

BOSTON, Dec. 21, (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and the Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 21 1942

Service Concert Draws 2,000

Boston, Dec. 20—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra played today for about 2,000 men and women of the armed forces and their companions in a free concert. Another such program will be announced soon.

The audience—officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and Navy—sang "The Star Spangled Banner" lustily at the beginning and called back Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, time and again at the close.

Koussevitzky, who had his 105 musicians stand to share the tribute, told his military audience:

"You are defending our country and our liberties. We, in our way, are soldiers. We are defending the high art of music, and, when you return to your homes, you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
DEC 20 1942

'Just as a Matter of Records'

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, has signed a long-term contract to make Victor recordings, it was announced last week by Frank B. Walker, vice-president of RCA-Victor.

The contract also calls for the exclusive recording performances of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, with Arthur Fiedler as conductor.

Just 25 years ago, the first Victor records of the Boston Symphony were released. These discs were history-making in the phonograph art, because for the first time an orchestra of 100 men was recorded. Up to this time, the size of an orchestra for records was limited to 40 men.

The first records of the Boston Symphony, which then was directed by Dr. Karl Muck, were three single-face discs. They were the Finale of the Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4, on two records, and the Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin.

The first recordings of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony were history-making also. Recorded in November of 1928, they were the first orthophonic records to be produced, and they ushered in a completely new conception of high quality sound-on-disc recording and reproduction for the home.

Since 1917 the records of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have sold in the millions. With Dr. Koussevitzky as conductor, the orchestra's records attained even

This Clipping From BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES
DEC 21 1942

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—(AP)—About 2000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained Sunday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the army and navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
HERALD
DEC 21 1942

Late News Flashes

BOSTON, Dec. 21, (AP)—About 2,000 men and women of the armed forces were entertained yesterday at a free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, told his audience of officers and enlisted personnel and nurses of both the Army and Navy that when they return to their homes after the war "you will find that we have kept the art of music on as high a plane as it is now."

HOLIDAY MUSIC BY SYMPHONY

Boston Post- Dec. 25 1942

Orchestra Will Broadcast Tomorrow Night

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

This week's Symphony programme, which received its first hearing yesterday afternoon, has distinctly a holiday flavor, though there are no seasonal allusions. The first hour of it was also designed for the radio audience, since a new series of broadcasts over 145 stations of the Blue Network will be inaugurated tomorrow evening. We have here one of the fruits of the orchestra's new union status.

Two numbers comprise the section to be broadcast, Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and the Fifth of Beethoven. What the radio listeners will not get is a brace of numbers by Rimsky-Korsakov, the "Night on Mount Triglav" (the concert arrangement of Act Three of the opera-ballet "Mlada") and the more familiar "Spanish Caprice." It is interesting to note that the three performances of the "Mlada" excerpt at Symphony Hall, in 1921, '33 and '35, have all taken place at what might be called the Christmas concerts.

Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony wears well, which is fortunate since it receives a good deal of attention in these parts; we were hearing it only last March. Here as elsewhere, Prokofieff proves that he has invention as well as craftsmanship and that is one reason why his music will outlast that of most of his contemporaries. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra always do this little work to a turn. There was a time when the conductor treated the Beethoven Fifth pretty freely. Yesterday's performance might be described as orthodox, though that does not mean that it was lacking in eloquence. Only a slight broadening of the tempo at the beginning of the finale, and at the return of these measures, savored of wilful interpretation. Dr. Koussevitsky was here sacrificing excitement for the sake of impressiveness. Incidentally, this is the first time the Fifth has been played at these concerts since its initial notes became the symbol of "V for Victory."

It might be said of the "Mlada" scene that, while far from being a masterpiece, it is nevertheless the work of a master. Like many another page of music designed to accompany scene and action, it is put at a disadvantage in the concert hall. The beginning and the end are plainly theatre music, and when there is nothing to look at they seem a little empty. In the middle, however, there is plenty going on, including an amusing anticipation of the Infernal Dance of the Subjects of Kastchei in Stravinsky's "Fire Bird."

Mr. Burk's notes reminded us that when Rimsky wrote this music in the spring of 1889 his mind was full of Wagner's "Ring," which had recently been introduced to St. Petersburg by our old friend Dr. Karl Muck. Not only is there a hint of Wagnerian sumptuousness in what was for Rimsky an unusually elaborate orchestral setting, but the prying ear may also detect a quotation from the "Ring," namely, the Fate Motive. Since this music depends so much on sheer richness of sound, it was fortunate yesterday in its performers. Richness of sound and Boston Symphony have long been synonymous terms. It was, in fact, an afternoon of superlative playing, with an exceedingly brilliant performance of the "Capriccio" for suitable conclusion.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
DEC 1942

OVERT

A large and enthusiastic audience clad in mufti, yesterday heard works of Brahms, Beethoven, Bach, Mozart and Sibelius performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The performance took place at Fort Devens, Mass., as a special Sunday afternoon feature of the musical life at the fort.

C. W. Stockbridge, Cellist, Dies

Dec 23 '42 Globe

Carl Wales Stockbridge, 59, cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died last evening at the Faulkner Hospital. He was stricken Thursday morning at Symphony Hall after playing the usual rehearsal with the orchestra and was unable to play a concert at Saunders Theatre, Cambridge, that evening. His home was at 28 Sunset Hill road, West Roxbury.

Stockbridge was born in Dedham, a descendant of the first settlers of Scituate. His father, who taught him to play the cello, was Arthur Beauvais Stockbridge of Somerville, a member of the Boston Symphony when it was founded in 1881.

His mother was Amalia Aberg, a noted opera singer and pianist. His brother, Arthur, was a violinist with the Boston Opera and Philadelphia symphony orchestras and the family often played together in concerts. Stockbridge also was a member of the Aeolians, a chamber music group which gave concerts throughout New England for the last seven or eight years.

Stockbridge joined the Boston Symphony in 1918 under the directorship of Henri Rabaud.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Catherine F. Stockbridge, and a daughter, Mrs. Thomas Elie of Wellesley. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Stockbridge, Cellist With Symphony, Dies

Dec 22 '42

Carl Wales Stockbridge of 28 Sunset Hill road, Roslindale, 59, 'cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died yesterday at the Faulkner Hospital after a brief illness. He was suddenly taken ill Thursday at the conclusion of the orchestra's regular rehearsal.

He was born in Hyde Park, the son of Arthur B. Stockbridge, 'cellist with the Boston Symphony at its founding, and Amalia Aberg, Swedish opera singer. His brother also was a distinguished musician.

He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1918, under the conductorship of Henri Rabaud, and had served there since. He was also a member of the Aeolian Quartet.

His widow, Mrs. Catherine F. Stockbridge, survives, as well as a daughter, Mrs. Thomas Elie of Wellesley.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 3:30 P.M., from the Waterman Chapel, 495 Commonwealth avenue.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
DEC 22 1942

C. Stockbridge, Boston Cellist

BOSTON, Dec. 22 (AP).—Carl Wales Stockbridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist, died yesterday after a short illness. He was stricken last Thursday after a rehearsal.

His father, Arthur Bealvais Stockbridge, a famous cellist from whom Carl learned his art, became a member of the symphony when it was founded in 1881. His mother was Amalia Aberg, noted opera singer and pianist.

Born in Boston, Stockbridge joined the Boston Symphony in 1918. He came of a family that numbered among its members the first settlers of the south shore town of Scituate.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
DEC 26 1942

The Lyons Den

Madame Chiang Kai-shek's hospital tre were postponed, because the doctor w treating her became a hospital patient him The long-standing feud between the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters and the Fed. Communications commission now is being settled. Neville Miller, head of the N. A. B., threw in the sponge when he went to see Chairman Fly of the F. C. C. . . . The Marshall Field group is trying to complete arrangements for Serge Koussevitzky to leave Boston and become the conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic next year.

This Clipping From SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS
DEC 26 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY

James G. McDonald, Blue Network analyst, will act as commentator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of broadcasts over KTMS, opening Saturday, to be heard each Saturday thereafter, from 5:15 to 6:15 p.m. He will interview Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and will ask him to relate his views on the forthcoming series.

In speaking of his part as the program's commentator McDonald states: "Ever since my student days at Harvard, when the Boston Symphony came to Cambridge and I first heard symphonic music, I have felt that the joy of great music should be the privilege of millions, and not merely of the few who can attend concerts in person.

"I am not a musicologist and shall not attempt to speak as such—I merely love music and admire the brilliant leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky and his unexcelled orchestra. In my commentaries I shall therefore attempt no erudite analysis of the music but rather do what I can to make the radio listener feel that he, in the deepest sense, is a participant in these enjoyable concerts."

over the 145-station network. Most will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

Dec. 25 1942

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Whenever Christmas falls on Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs the afternoon concert of the week on Thursday. So it occurred this year, and yesterday afternoon Symphony Hall was about filled with an audience who heard Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, and two of Rimsky-Korsakoff's colorful specimens of orchestral mastery, "Night on Mount Triglaff" and Spanish Caprice. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

It was not the most interesting program imaginable, and somewhat indigestibly put together, although the individual items were easily assimilable. At any rate, it was well enough designed for a preholiday afternoon when, it is safe to assume, many present were more or less pre-occupied with Christmas matters. Especially in its first part, it will also be well adapted for the Boston Symphony's first broadcast as a union orchestra, tomorrow evening.

Mr. Koussevitzky feels certain compositions very strongly. The "V for Victory" Symphony is one of them. Accordingly, the Beethoven Fifth received a reading of extreme intensity. The clenched fist of his left hand by which the conductor signalled the portentous opening theme, symbolized the way the first movement and finale were played. He really asked too much intensity, with the result that the tone of these movements, whenever there were f's in the score, was coarse and thick. Quite different was the andante con moto, which Mr. Koussevitzy took at a good tempo and with delicacy and instrumental song as his evident objectives.

For Prokofieff and Rimsky-Korsakoff, the Boston Symphony virtuosi were back [illegible] rm. The "Classical" [illegible] no more than a tou[illegible] ormal construction [illegible]mphony orch[illegible]ucting, gave t[illegible]d res[illegible] at satirizes 18th Ce[illegible] orderliness, glazed ov[illegible]ome of the slickest orchestration and mild dissonance ever conceived. It is very clever, very amusing, and it must be played with absolute precision and sophistication. It was.

The Spanish Caprice is another of those intricate and decorative scores that Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony do superlatively well. While "Night on Mount Triglaff" is more diffuse than concentrated fantasy, and its length is excessive, it, too, has a foundation of virtuosity. Like its fellow product of Rimskyan science, the fantasy was most persuasively projected. Whatever its faults as an entity, "Night on Mount Triglaff" does contain many exquisite effects and pages of arresting imagination.

The program will be repeated at 8:15 tomorrow evening. Next week we shall hear the Introduction and Wedding March from Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera, "Le Coq d'Or"; Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantschina," the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovich, Wagner's "A Siegfried Idyll" and Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg."—C. W. D.

IC

m music of questionable value, h though, as in this work, the criptive qualities of the music are erbly conveyed. Berlioz had the c invention and—even in his more tant moods—the elegance, to ust a Baedeker into his audie's hands and make it magical. hsky-Korsakov, in "Night on unt Triglav," forces one on you h a little too much insistence. e it as it may, Dr. Koussevitzky the orchestra whirled through complexities with assurance and at bravura, while the musicians were called upon to take difficult passages achieved notable reS. The same held true of the liar "Capriccio Espagnol," a her more successful picture piece n "Night on Mount Triglav."

he concert opened with one of orchestra's miracles of transency in Prokofieff's Classical mphony, and continued into the erval with a glowing performance Beethoven Fifth. Dr. Koussevitzky k the first movement a little more wly and with a good many more otional ups and downs than is tomary, but the suceeding movents were without idiosyncratic mish. On the contrary, the erzo-finale was given with trendous drive and effect, and ought conductor and orchestra an ovation. This concert will be repeated tomorrow night at 8:15. Next week the orchestra will play Rimsky-Korsakov's introduction and Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or;" Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina;" Shostakovitch's Sixth Symphony and two Wagner pieces: "A Siegfried Idyll" and the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

achieving movement and continuity without elaborate counterpoint (not necessarily a desirable feat, by the way), but as music it seems definitely to require the simultaneous employment of a color organ and a Walt Disney film. When you see the entire audience reading the program notes along with the music, you can be pretty sure you are hearing pro-

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
DEC 27 1942

Will Play Here Soon As Union Musicians

Settlement of Differences Between James C. Petrillo And Trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra Fails To Bring Dire Results Predicted by Die-Hards—Benefits Cited

WHEN the Boston Symphony orchestra gives its Smith college and Springfield Community Concert programs in February and March, it will appear for the first time in its long and illustrious history as a union orchestra. Negotiations between James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, and the trustees of the orchestra and Dr Serge Koussevitzky began in earnest last spring and were peacefully concluded only a few weeks ago. In the interim, Springfield's Auditorium and Smith's John M. Greene hall were threatened with boycott by AFM concert artists and orchestras on demand of the local musicians' unions. Pro and antiunion die-hards took the attitude of "figat unto the death" but fortunately cooler heads prevailed and the Boston Symphony will make its tours musically unimpaired and mentally at ease.

In spite of a widespread campaign of distortion, vilification and ridicule against Mr Petrillo, led by such professional labor-baiters as Westbrook Pegler, the union president had points in his favor as the trustees did in theirs. The latter did not oppose unionization but certain bylaws placing limitations on the hiring and firing of musicians, the hours of rehearsing and maintenance of discipline. Dr Koussevitzky, of course, would brook no interference with his conceptions of musical perfection and refused to jeopardize these conceptions by dividing his authority with a union grievance committee.

With the settlement now an accomplished fact, it appears that those who predicted dire results from doing business with Mr Petrillo have turned out to be poor prophets. Dr Koussevitzky and the trustees have been able to insure the musical integrity of the Boston Symphony. The conductor is not restricted in his choice of musicians. He does not have to hire them from the ranks of local unions in the city where the orchestra was established as the bylaws of the AFM provides. Nor does a musician hired from another city have to go through the complicated procedure of having to apply for a transfer from one local to the other.

In addition to the supreme benefit of still being able to hear great orchestras unimpaired by unionization, the public is deriving immediate and direct benefits from the settlement of the dispute. The Boston Symphony resumed its broadcasting last night and will be heard regularly during its season on Saturday evenings for an hour starting at 8.15. And, second, soon after the labor contract was signed, the Boston Symphony and Dr Koussevitzky signed a long-term contract to make Victor recordings. It was approximately 25 years ago that the first Victor records of the Boston symphony were released, representing a great advance in record making for this was the first time that an orchestra of 100 men had been recorded. Previously the size had been limited to 40 men. The first records of the Boston Symphony, then directed by Dr Karl Muck, were three single face discs; the finale of the Tschaikowsky Symphony No 4 on two records and the Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin. There is a third benefit to the public. The orchestra can engage any soloist or guest conductor it desires. Fourthly, there is now no fear that any hall in the country may be closed to it.

MILTON BERLINER.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
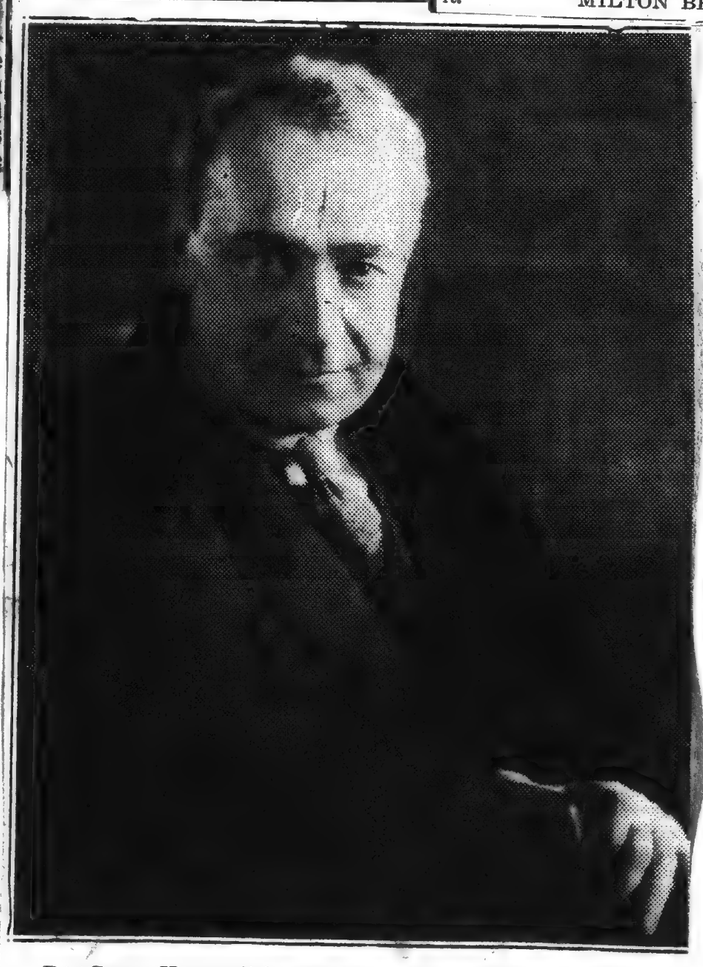
COURANT
DEC 27 1942

Leads Orchestra H



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, dean of the conductors in the Bu Symphony Series, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra i other of its brilliant concerts at the Bushnell Memorial on T night, January 5. This, the third event of the Bushnell Sym Series, is scheduled to begin at 8:15 o'clock. The program will nounced shortly.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 28 1942

George Szell will get the Chicago Symphony directorial post . . . and one of the slightly complicated reasons for the surrender of the Boston Symphony to the Musicians Union was the desire to see Serge Koussevitzky get the John Barbirolli post with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, and end the guest conductor system (you figure it out) . . . Highest price ever paid for a single

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
DEC 28 1942

The Voice Of BROAD
By Dorothy

Leopold Stokowski has been offered the leadership of the Boston Symphony. Koussevitzky, the present conductor, is slated for the N. Y. Philharmonic.

Herald
1942 Dec. 29

Suppose

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Monday Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave the third concert of its Monday-Tuesday series in Symphony Hall last night. The program was as follows:

Corelli
Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie; arr. Pinelli.
Brahms
Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90.
Rimsky-Korsakov
"Night on Mount Triglav" from "Mlada"; Capriccio Espagnol, Op. 34.

Taking it by and large, the Monday-Tuesday audiences came off a little better than the Friday-Saturday audiences this time, for they had a perfect performance of Brahms' Third (and perhaps best) Symphony in place of the Beethoven Fifth. Not that there's anything wrong with the Fifth; it's just that you hear it practically every week. So last night's concert—the first half of it, anyhow—was both beautiful and beautifully played. The last half was beautifully played, period.

Although it seemed on Friday that the orchestra and conductor never again could repeat the miraculous unanimity and string tone they achieved with the group of pieces from Corelli, behold a repetition last night. The second two of the Suite, that is the Gigue and the Badinerie, were absolutely incomparably done. The Sarabande, although equal to them in performance, seemed to us appallingly dragged out. It is, after all, a dance, and while the word sarabande is practically never spoken without the adjective "stately" before it, last night's tempo was so stately it virtually stood still.

The Brahms was without flaw, unless you consider the generally slower tempo of the first movement as one. Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of the work is warm and glowing, leaning a little perhaps to the romantic, but never to the over-lush. The symphony requires a conductor with such an ear as his, for the scoring is deceptively simple, and only the utmost subtlety of balance between the choirs will serve to bring out the colors of its fabric. As Dr. Koussevitzky's ear is perhaps the firmest foundation of his genius, the Brahms' Third emerged with the utmost transparency from the beginning to the end.

As for the "Night on Mount Triglav," let us hope it will be consigned to the dust bin after today. Consisting of flamboyant orchestral effects which require the services of a grade B movie, it seemed like utter nonsense at first hearing. At second hearing, it is plain that no self-respecting grade B movie would want it as musical accompaniment. It allowed us to hear, however, some spectacular solo passages by Messrs. Cardillo and Polatschek on clarinets, Messrs. Pappoutsakis and Kaplan on piccolos, and Mr. Zighera on the harp, and for that we are grateful. The orchestra and conductor traversed it with customary brilliance, and the concert came to an end with an even more virtuoso performance of the same composer's "Capriccio Espagnol." The concert will be repeated this afternoon.

[17]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
DEC 22 1942

C. Stockbridge, Boston Cellist

BOSTON, Dec. 22 (AP).—Carl Wales Stockbridge, 59, Boston Symphony Orchestra cellist, died yesterday after a short illness. He was stricken last Thursday after a rehearsal.

His father, Arthur Bealvais Stockbridge, a famous cellist from whom Carl learned his art, became a member of the symphony when it was founded in 1881. His mother was Amalia Aberg, noted opera singer and pianist.

Born in Boston, Stockbridge joined the Boston Symphony in 1918. He came of a family that numbered among its members the first settlers of the south shore town of Scituate.

over the 145-station network. Most will originate in Symphony Hall, Boston, and it is planned to carry the "Pops" concerts from the Charles River Esplanade beginning in May.

Dec. 25 1942

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Whenever Christmas falls on Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs the afternoon concert of the week on Thursday. So it occurred this year, and yesterday afternoon Symphony Hall was about filled with an audience who heard Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony, the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, and two of Rimsky-Korsakoff's colorful specimens of orchestral mastery, "Night on Mount Triglaff" and Spanish Caprice. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

It was not the most interesting program imaginable, and somewhat indigestibly put together, although the individual items were easily assimilable. At any rate, it was well enough designed for a preholiday afternoon when, it is safe to assume, many present were more or less pre-occupied with Christmas matters. Especially in its first part, it will also be well adapted for the Boston Symphony's first broadcast as a union orchestra, tomorrow evening.

Mr. Koussevitzky feels certain compositions very strongly. The "V for Victory" Symphony is one of them. Accordingly, the Beethoven Fifth received a reading of extreme intensity. The clenched fist of his left hand by which the conductor signalled the portentous opening theme, symbolized the way the first movement and finale were played. He really asked too much intensity, with the result that the tone of these movements, whenever there were f's in the score, was coarse and thick. Quite different was the andante con moto, which Mr. Koussevitzky took

Herald-Boston
Dec. 25, 1942

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave the 10th regular concert of its 62d season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, the program being as follows:

Prokofieff.....Classical Symphony, Op. 25
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 5, Op. 67
Rimsky-Korsakov
"Night on Mount Triglav" from "Mlada"; Capriccio Espagnol, Op. 34

Prokofieff is always effective, Beethoven is always good and Rimsky-Korsakov, of course, can always be depended on for show. Added together they spell a reasonably lively afternoon provided a symphony concert were a novelty only occasionally encountered, but as these compositions are all encountered at frequent intervals (excepting the "Mlada" excerpt), it will be seen that the orchestra's observance of the Christmas season consisted of a purely routine affair distinguished mostly by the customary technical excellence.

Although the "Mlada" pot-pourri has been put away for something like seven years, that period is hardly sufficient to ripen it for further consumption. What utter nonsense it it! It's interesting, to be sure, in a musicological way for the skill of its scoring and the novelty of its orchestral balance, and it is a fine thing to study for its lesson in achieving movement and continuity without elaborate counterpoint (not necessarily a desirable feat, by the way), but as music it seems definitely to require the simultaneous employment of a color organ and a Walt Disney film. When you see the entire audience reading the program notes along with the music, you can be pretty sure you are hearing program music of questionable value, even though, as in this work, the descriptive qualities of the music are superbly conveyed. Berlioz had the lyric invention and—even in his more blatant moods—the elegance, to thrust a Baedeker into his audience's hands and make it magical. Rimsky-Korsakov, in "Night on Mount Triglav," forces one on you with a little too much insistence.

Be it as it may, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra whirled through its complexities with assurance and great bravura, while the musicians who were called upon to take difficult solo passages achieved notable results. The same held true of the familiar "Capriccio Espagnol," a rather more successful picture piece than "Night on Mount Triglav."

The concert opened with one of the orchestra's miracles of transparency in Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, and continued into the interval with a glowing performance of Beethoven Fifth. Dr. Koussevitzky took the first movement a little more slowly and with a good many more emotional ups and downs than is customary, but the suceeding movements were without idiosyncratic blemish. On the contrary, the scherzo-finale was given with tremendous drive and effect, and brought conductor and orchestra an ovation. This concert will be repeated tomorrow night at 8:15. Next week the orchestra will play Rimsky-Korsakov's introduction and Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or;" Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina;" Shostakovitch's Sixth Symphony and two Wagner pieces: "A Siegfried Idyll" and the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
DEC 26 1942

The Lyons Den

Madame Chiang Kai-shek's hospital tre were postponed, because the doctor w treating her became a hospital patient him The long-standing feud between the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters and the Fed. Communications commission now is being settled. Neville Miller, head of the N. A. B., threw in the sponge when he went to see Chairman Fly of the F. C. C. . . . The Marshall Field group is trying to complete arrangements for Serge Koussevitzky to leave Boston and become the conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic next year.

This Clipping From SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS
DEC 26 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY

James G. McDonald, Blue Network analyst, will act as commentator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra series of broadcasts over KTMS, opening Saturday, to be heard each Saturday thereafter, from 5:15 to 6:15 p.m. He will interview Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and will ask him to relate his views on the forthcoming series.

In speaking of his part as the program's commentator McDonald states: "Ever since my student days at Harvard, when the Boston Symphony came to Cambridge and I first heard symphonic music, I have felt that the joy of great music should be the privilege of millions, and not merely of the few who can attend concerts in person.

"I am not a musicologist and shall not attempt to speak as such—I merely love music and admire the brilliant leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky and his unexcelled orchestra. In my commentaries I shall therefore attempt no erudite analysis of the music but rather do what I can to make the radio listener feel that he, in the deepest sense, is a participant in these enjoyable concerts."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
DEC 27 1942

Will Play Here Soon As Union Musicians

Settlement of Differences Between James C. Petrillo And Trustees of Boston Symphony Orchestra Fails To Bring Dire Results Predicted by Die-Hards—Benefits Cited

WHEN the Boston Symphony orchestra gives its Smith college and Springfield Community Concert programs in February and March, it will appear for the first time in its long and illustrious history as a union orchestra. Negotiations between James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, and the trustees of the orchestra and Dr Serge Koussevitzky began in earnest last spring and were peacefully concluded only a few weeks ago. In the interim, Springfield's Auditorium and Smith's John M. Greene hall were threatened with boycott by AFM concert artists and orchestras on demand of the local musicians' unions. Pro and antiunion die-hards took the attitude of "fight unto the death" but fortunately cooler heads prevailed and the Boston Symphony will make its tours musically unimpaired and mentally at ease.

In spite of a widespread campaign of distortion, vilification and ridicule against Mr Petrillo, led by such professional labor-baiters as Westbrook Pegler, the union president had points in his favor as the trustees did in theirs. The latter did not oppose unionization but certain bylaws placing limitations on the hiring and firing of musicians, the hours of rehearsing and maintenance of discipline. Dr Koussevitzky, of course, would brook no interference with his conceptions of musical perfection and refused to jeopardize these conceptions by dividing his authority with a union grievance committee.

With the settlement now an accomplished fact, it appears that those who predicted dire results from doing business with Mr Petrillo have turned out to be poor prophets. Dr Koussevitzky and the trustees have been able to insure the musical integrity of the Boston Symphony. The conductor is not restricted in his choice of musicians. He does not have to hire them from the ranks of local unions in the city where the orchestra was established as the bylaws of the AFM provides. Nor does a musician hired from another city have to go through the complicated procedure of having to apply for a transfer from one local to the other.

In addition to the supreme benefit of still being able to hear great orchestras unimpaired by unionization, the public is deriving immediate and direct benefits from the settlement of the dispute. The Boston Symphony resumed its broadcasting last night and will be heard regularly during its season on Saturday evenings for an hour starting at 8.15. And, second, soon after the labor contract was signed, the Boston Symphony and Dr Koussevitzky signed a long-term contract to make Victor recordings. It was approximately 25 years ago that the first Victor records of the Boston symphony were released, representing a great advance in record making for this was the first time that an orchestra of 100 men had been recorded. Previously the size had been limited to 40 men. The first records of the Boston Symphony, then directed by Dr Karl Muck, were three single face discs; the finale of the Tschaikowsky Symphony No 4 on two records and the Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin. There is a third benefit to the public. The orchestra can engage any soloist or guest conductor it desires. Fourthly, there is now no fear that any hall in the country may be closed to it.

MILTON BERLINER.

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
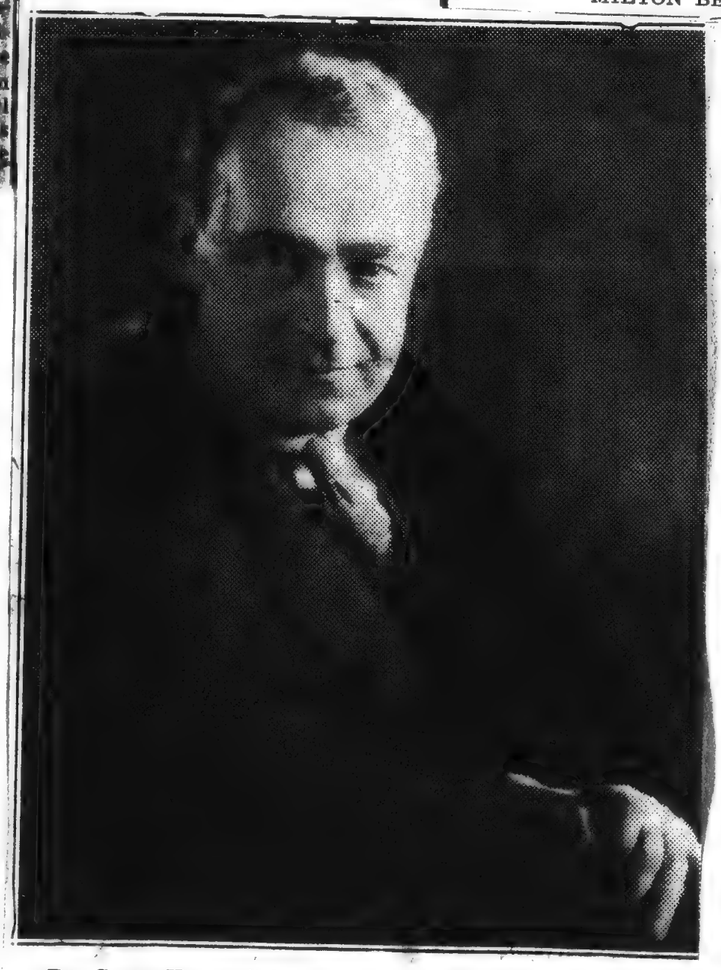
COURANT
DEC 27 1942

Leads Orchestra H



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, dean of the conductors in the Bu Symphony Series, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra i other of its brilliant concerts at the Bushnell Memorial on T night, January 5. This, the third event of the Bushnell Sym Series, is scheduled to begin at 8:15 o'clock. The program will l nounced shortly.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NEWS
DEC 28 1942

George Szell will get the Chicago Symphony directorial post . . . and one of the slightly complicated reasons for the surrender of the Boston Symphony to the Musicians Union was the desire to see Serge Koussevitzky get the John Barbirolli post with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, and end the guest conductor system (you figure it out) . . . Highest price ever paid for a single

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
DEC 28 1942

The Voice Of BROAD
By Dorothy

Leopold Stokowski has been offered the leadership of the Boston Symphony. Koussevitzky, the present conductor, is slated for the N. Y. Philharmonic.

Herald
1942 Dec. 29

Suppose

MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Monday Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, gave the third concert of its Monday-Tuesday series in Symphony Hall last night. The program was as follows:

Corelli
Sarabande, Gigue and Badinerie; arr. Pinelli.
Brahms
Symphony No. 3 in F major, Op. 90.
Rimsky-Korsakov
"Night on Mount Triglav" from "Mlada"; Capriccio Espagnol, Op. 34.

Taking it by and large, the Monday-Tuesday audiences came off a little better than the Friday-Saturday audiences this time, for they had a perfect performance of Brahms' Third (and perhaps best) Symphony in place of the Beethoven Fifth. Not that there's anything wrong with the Fifth; it's just that you hear it practically every week. So last night's concert—the first half of it, anyhow—was both beautiful and beautifully played. The last half was beautifully played, period.

Although it seemed on Friday that the orchestra and conductor never again could repeat the miraculous unanimity and string tone they achieved with the group of pieces from Corelli, behold a repetition last night. The second two of the Suite, that is the Gigue and the Badinerie, were absolutely incomparably done.

Post
Y, DECEMBER 29,

ENTHUSIASTIC OVER CONCERT

Audience Well Pleased at Symphony

The third Monday evening symphony concert of the season took place last evening. Dr. Koussevitzky had planned to introduce a novelty on this occasion, the newly-completed Fourth Symphony Nicolai Berezowsky, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, Inc., established in memory of Mme. Koussevitzky who died a little less than a year ago.

However, there was insufficient time to prepare the new work and in its stead the conductor offered the Third Symphony of Brahms, which had been played at a pair of regular concerts earlier in the season.

Last evening's programme, which will be repeated this afternoon, further contained a Suite made by Pinelli out of movements from the Corelli sonatas, the symphonic arrangement of the third act of Rimsky-Korsakov's operaballet, "Mlada" (Night on Mt. Triglav), and the same composer's brilliant and always popular Spanish Caprice.

Since all of these numbers have already been heard this season at the Friday and Saturday concerts, comment on them is unnecessary at this time. In their several ways they serve to display the virtues of the orchestra and its leader and last night's audience, while somewhat smaller than usual, probably because to the holiday season, was properly enthusiastic.

[17]

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 27 1942

Hot Music Thaws an Alaskan Winter for Troops

AN ALASKAN ARMY OUTPOST, Dec. 26—(AP)—The Boston and Detroit Symphony orchestras were never like this, but Warrant Officer Elliott Paturzo has an idea that the audiences here are more fun.

Mr. Paturzo has one of the strangest jobs in the entire Aleutian campaign. Though this war definitely is not being fought behind whipping banners, Mr. Paturzo leads the band—which commanders consider just as essential now as ever to the morale of troops, although in a different manner.

Mr. Paturzo's band presumably could play any marching song; at least, it does very well with overtures. But its specialty is the hot stuff with Sergt. Carl de Prospero, once with a famous dance band, as the shining light.

His trumpet is hot and loud and is played on the definite theory that written music is a mistake. He can, and does, make quonset huts shudder just for the fun of it.

The band plays indoors when the camp has any suitable building, outdoors when it hasn't. It has played in the rain, in wind that blows the music practically back down the horns.

Basically, the band is the same as any other good army band. That is, it puts on a program with a mixture of classical music, military airs — and lots of swing. It boasts a master of ceremonies, Corp. Lee Drekish, of Detroit, once a clarinetist with an NBC orchestra, whose specialty now is gags which would bring blushes to the cheek of a burlesque strip teaser. The troops yell for more.

The band has the usual quartet, none of whom would pretend to be able to sing; half a dozen soloists such as Sergt. Joe Wachowski, Detroit, on the clarinet, and Sergt. Romeo Buano, New York, once with Les Brown's orchestra. It even carries its own arranger, Tech. Sergt. Eddie Barrow, once with Red Nickols' band.

But it differs in two respects from other military bands. First, it is independent, attached to regular fighting organizations only for a few weeks or a month at a time.

Most important, its job is definitely in the combat zone. Other bands may stay where barracks boast hot and cold water, but this organization is out where the going is rugged. At this base, it has played at least one concert nightly for weeks, and moves every day. It moves in trucks, plays under guttering lanterns or electric lights supplied by portable plants.

Its concert halls are crowded huts, decorated as often as not with machine gun nests close by the windows. It has played in dugouts intended for ammunition storage, in the open under the shadows of heavy artillery, in remote infantry posts where the only cover of any kind was small tents which definitely would not accommodate a tuba.

Mr. Paturzo, just now, does not know whether his next assignment will be to another Aleutian base or to some troop concentration near the Arctic Circle. But he's fairly certain it will not be in the symphony halls of either Boston or Detroit.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit For Last Season $41,712

First Public Financial Statement in Recent Years Is Issued

BOSTON, Oct. 29 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions. Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures.

Season Ended in August

For the season ended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston and $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (Popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular season consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 69 Pop and 30 Esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

New York
DEC 30 1942

Themes and Variations

By Henry Simon

What the Doctor Ordered

It is almost two full seasons now since the Philharmonic-Symphony has had a regular, full-time conductor. In that time it has gone, in the general caliber of its performances, from bad to worse—and that in spite of its having had the ministrations of most of the finest conductors in the country. There have been some notable exceptions, of course, including Beecham and Monteux, but a combination of Toscanini, Stokowski, Koussevitzky and the rest should be able to lick an orchestra into shape, if any combination could.

What we have learned (as most of us suspected from the beginning) is that for such a job a round dozen of good men is not one-twelfth so good as one good man. It is therefore a fine omen that the country's most prominent orchestra (most prominent on account of its radio following) is to have a single musical director next year and that he should be Artur Rodzinski.

He has one of the best minds and hearts going for presenting good modern music. He is at his best with big, spectacular works. He is less stimulating with the older classics, but he never lets you down with a cute or a labored reading. But, most important of all, in this stage of the Philharmonic's history, he is a first-rate organizer, a man who knows what he wants and one who has a way of getting it.

The Philharmonic needs a builder-upper. That is precisely what Artur Rodzinski is.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY IN RED

Boston, Oct. 30.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712 and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

This Clipping From EAST PALESTINE, OHIO
LEADER
23 1942

Symphony Hits New 'Low' With the Bass Clarinet

BOSTON (U.P.)—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shsotakovitch Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest tone is equivalent to the lowest A-flat on a piano.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712, and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for the present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

BELLEVILLE, N. J
NEWS
10/15/42

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Reports Deficit

BOSTON, Oct. 29 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season ended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston and $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular season consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 69 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

Leon Carson Musical Silhouettes—A Commentary On Music

CDXVIII

"Democracy is a culture and an art no less than a political contact. It is an idea and a faith no less than an economic system. If the metaphor offend not— democracy is a song."

Rumor:

The New Jersey Philharmonic Symphony, which gave so much pleasure last season under the baton of Henri Pensis, may be missing this year. Industry has taken many of its members and the group as known last year, doubtless will be unable to resume its concerts in Essex House. It is an unfortunate circumstance, indeed.

Change in Procedures:

For the first time in its history the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra has appealed for contributions to help meet expenses for the current season. Last year the deficit amounted to approximately $38,000. Previously, for a period of seven years the losses were made up by a number of wealthy friends, no longer available. It most certainly requires a tremendous sum of money annually to maintain a symphonic organization on a large scale — in fact any society of whatever size — and a good idea of what it is all about may be gained by learning that the Boston Symphony's estimated expenses for the coming year read something like this. For salaries, $600,000 (too much); for soloist's fees and the cost of music, printing, travel and miscellaneous, $15,000. For the maintenance of Symphony Hall in Boston, $86,000; and for the maintenance of Tanglewood (Berkshire Festival) at Lenox, Mass. — $7,000 also goes into the Orchestra's pension fund. All this gives one a little realization of what the income must be, — even to gain a fair break.

The Boston Symphony still remains the only major non-union symphonic orchestra in the country, and a recent statement from the trustees implies that the Boston Society will continue its present policy, but does not close the door to unionization later if certain features in the Federation by-laws should be changed. This combination has proved a hard nut for the self-styled music dictator Petrillo to crack! May he have many more!

Incidentally, our own Nutley Symphony is facing a new season with a liberal schedule for wartime. It, too, has expenses and problems galore. This courageous undertaking should be heartily supported by our citizens. After all music is always the back-bone of morale in a war-time period, and it therefore becomes our duty and privilege to assist in making this home front a thing of power and beauty.

Opera Opening:

Several weeks ago in this column we made a guess about the opening night of the 58th season at the Metropolitan Opera on Monday evening, November 23. For once, we were right!

The diminutive French coloratura, Lily Pons will sing the title role in Donizetti's "La Fille du Regiment." This light, somewhat airy opera seems to be a strange choice for the initial venture of a serious season of grand opera, although of course it provides a most suitable vehicle for Miss Pons' vocal equipment. She will also sing the leading role in "Lucia di Lammermoor," later in the season.

Dec · MUSIC / 942
29, SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third Monday evening concert at Symphony Hall last evening. A familiar program included a Corelli Suite for Strings, arranged by Ettore Pinelli; the Third Symphony of Brahms, and two works of Rimsky-Korsakov, "Night on Mount Triglav" and "Spanish Caprice."

The Corelli Suite is comprised of three movements — Sarabande, Gigue, Badinerie—garnered out of various violin sonatas with continuo. It is light 17th century music, tuneful and agreeable, but quite innocuous. The opening Sarabande, taken at a very deliberate pace, was played rather stodgily.

On the other hand, the Brahms Symphony was fraught with an emotional intensity and drive which stirred the audience to give Mr. Koussevitzky and his band a real ovation. As with the "Spanish Caprice" which closed the program, this was an example of the Boston Symphony's incomparable virtuosity.

"Night on Mount Triglav" is a concert synthesis of the third act of Rimsky - Korsakov's opera - ballet, "Mlada." It contains a good many pages of tinsel novelty and some stunning orchestral effects. But a good deal of it is dull, too.

The program will be repeated this afternoon at 3.—J. W. R.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
OCT 30 1942

HUB SYMPHONY DEFICIT FOR 1941 SAID $41,712

Boston, Oct. 30—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony's Net Deficit for Season $41,712

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712 and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

[16]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
DEC 27 1942

Hot Music Thaws an Alaskan Winter for Troops

AN ALASKAN ARMY OUTPOST, Dec. 26—(AP)—The Boston and Detroit Symphony orchestras were never like this, but Warrant Officer Elliott Paturzo has an idea that the audiences here are more fun.

Mr. Paturzo has one of the strangest jobs in the entire Aleutian campaign. Though this war definitely is not being fought behind whipping banners, Mr. Paturzo leads the band—which commander consider just as essential now [illegible] the morale of [illegible] a different [illegible]

[illegible] probably [illegible] bullets seemed to cut closer. We arose and started again. The band [illegible] sounded like a tommy gun. Thinking it was all a mistake, we left our tents in a tree [illegible] has played in the rain, in wind that blows the music practically back down the horns.

Basically, the band is the same as any other good army band. That is, it puts on a program with a mixture of classical music, military airs — and lots of swing. It boasts a master of ceremonies, Corp. Lee Drekish, of Detroit, once a clarinetist with an NBC orchestra, whose specialty now is gags which would bring blushes to the cheek of a burlesque strip teaser. The troops yell for more.

The band has the usual quartet, none of whom would pretend to be able to sing; half a dozen soloists such as Sergt. Joe Wachowski, Detroit, on the clarinet, and Romeo Buano, New York, [illegible] Les Brown's orchestra. its own arranger, Barrow, once [illegible] respects [illegible] first, [illegible] not down." their ob-

Most important, its job is definitely in the combat zone. Other bands may stay where barracks boast hot and cold water, but this organization is out where the going is rugged. At this base, it has played at least one concert nightly for weeks, and movies every day. It moves in trucks, plays under guttering lanterns or electric lights supplied by portable plants.

Its concert halls are crowded huts, decorated as often as not with machine gun nests close by the windows. It has played in dugouts intended for ammunition storage, in the open under the shadows of heavy artillery, in remote infantry posts where the only cover of any kind was small tents which definitely would not accommodate a tuba.

Mr. Paturzo, just now, does not know whether his next assignment will be to another Aleutian base or to some troop concentration near the Arctic Circle. But he's fairly certain it will not be in symphony halls of either Boston or Detroit.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony D[illegible] For Last Season

First Public Financial Statem[illegible] Years Is Issued

BOSTON, Oct. 29 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions. Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures.

Season Ended in August

For the season ended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $[illegible] in [illegible] reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,[illegible] come listed [illegible] ties from s[illegible]

Expendit[illegible] the main [illegible] salaries.

Altogeth[illegible] concerts [illegible] the 1941- [illegible] son cons[illegible] ton and [illegible] 69 Pop [illegible] concerts [illegible]

[illegible] ways Elect

CHICAGO, Oct. 29 (AP) — Any little fellows who drop in at a Loop restaurant tomorrow due for the brush-off and a Halloween scare.

The Tall Girls' Club (members six feet or over) is entertaining 100 six-foot service men at a Halloween masked party.

BIG STUFF

There One for a comic strip character.

Republican, received 307 votes. Nov. 4—and the candidate was opposed.

The county spent from $1200 to $1500 as W. N. McDonald, [illegible] votes. Write-in votes. One four CARTHAGE, Mo., Jan. 29 (AP)—It cost Jasper County about $4 a vote to elect a representative for the special session of the state legislature called for Nov. 4—and the candidate was unopposed.

The county spent from $1200 to $1500 as W. N. McDonald, Republican, received 307 votes. Write-in votes were four

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
New York
DEC 30 1942

Themes and Variations

By HENRY SIMON

What the Doctor Ordered

It is almost two full seasons now since the Philharmonic-Symphony has had a regular, full-time conductor. In that time it has gone, in the general caliber of its performances, from bad to worse—and that in spite of its having had the ministrations of most of the finest conductors in the country. There have been some notable exceptions, of course, including Beecham and Monteux, but a combination of Toscanini, Stokowski, Koussevitzky and the rest should be able to lick an orchestra into shape, if any combination could.

What we have learned (as most of us suspected from the beginning) is that for such a job a round dozen of good men is not one-twelfth so good as one good man. It is therefore a fine omen that the country's most prominent orchestra (most prominent on account of its radio following) is to have a single musical director next year and that he should be Artur Rodzinski.

He has one of the best minds and hearts going for presenting good modern music. He is at his best with big, spectacular works. He is less stimulating with the older classics, but he never lets you down with a cute or a labored reading. But, most important of all, in this stage of the Philharmonic's history, he is a first-rate organizer, a man who knows what he wants and one who has a way of getting it.

The Philharmonic needs a builder-upper. That is precisely what Artur Rodzinski is.

This Clipping From EAST PALESTINE, OHIO
LEADER
[illegible] 2 3 1942

Symphony Hits New 'Low' With the Bass Clarinet

BOSTON (U.P.)—The bass clarinet has hit a new low note with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

For its first performance of the Shsotakovitch Seventh Symphony the Boston orchestra introduced the new instrument, which has five new low notes below the usual final bass. The instrument's lowest tone is equivalent to the lowest A-flat on a piano.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the orchestra, spent several months perfecting the instrument to get the exact effect wanted by the composer

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
OCT 30 1942

New England News Briefs

Boston, Oct. 30.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712 and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

This Clipping From WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712, and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for the present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

Coming Season Is $[illegible] 000

Boston, Oct. 29—(AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season ended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston and $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular season consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 69 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

BELLEVILLE, N. J
NEWS
10/15/42

eon Carson Musical Silhouettes—A Commentary On Music

CDXVIII

"Democracy is a culture and an art no less than a political contact. It is an idea and a faith no less than an economic system. If the metaphor offend not— democracy is a song."

Rumor:

The New Jersey Philharmonic Symphony, which gave so much pleasure last season under the baton of Henri Pensis, may be missing this year. Industry has taken many of its members and the group as known last year, doubtless will be unable to resume its concerts in Essex House. It is an unfortunate circumstance, indeed.

Change in Procedures:

For the first time in its history the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra has appealed for contributions to help meet expenses for the current season. Last year the deficit amounted to approximately $38,000. Previously, for a period of seven years the losses were made up by a number of wealthy friends, no longer available. It most certainly requires a tremendous sum of money annually to maintain a symphonic organization on a large scale — in fact any society of whatever size — and a good idea of what it is all about may be gained by learning that the Boston Symphony's estimated expenses for the coming year read something like this. For salaries, $600,000 (too much); for soloist's fees and the cost of music, printing, travel and miscellaneous, $15,000. For the maintenance of Symphony Hall in Boston, $86,000; and for the maintenance of Tanglewood (Berkshire Festival) at Lenox, Mass. — $7,000 also goes into the Orchestra's pension fund. All this gives one a little realization of what the income must be, — even to gain a fair break.

The Boston Symphony still remains the only major non-union symphonic orchestra in the country, and a recent statement from the trustees implies that the Boston Society will continue its present policy, but does not close the door to unionization later if certain features in the Federation by-laws should be changed. This combination has proved a hard nut for the self-styled music dictator Petrillo to crack! May he have many more!

Incidentally, our own Nutley Symphony is facing a new season with a liberal schedule for wartime. It, too, has expenses and problems galore. This courageous undertaking should be heartily supported by our citizens. After all music is always the back-bone of morale in a war-time period, and it therefore becomes our duty and privilege to assist in making this home front a thing of power and beauty.

Opera Opening:

Several weeks ago in this column we made a guess about the opening night of the 58th season at the Metropolitan Opera on Monday evening, November 23. For once, we were right!

The diminutive French coloratura, Lily Pons will sing the title role in Donizetti's "La Fille du Regiment." This light, somewhat airy opera seems to be a strange choice for the initial venture of a serious season of grand opera, although of course it provides a most suitable vehicle for Miss Pons' vocal equipment. She will also sing the leading role in "Lucia di Lammermoor," later in the season.

Dec · MUSIC / 942
29, SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third Monday evening concert at Symphony Hall last evening. A familiar program included a Corelli Suite for Strings, arranged by Ettore Pinelli; the Third Symphony of Brahms, and two works of Rimsky-Korsakov, "Night on Mount Triglav" and "Spanish Caprice."

The Corelli Suite is comprised of three movements — Sarabande, Gigue, Badinerie—garnered out of various violin sonatas with continuo. It is light 17th century music, tuneful and agreeable, but quite innocuous. The opening Sarabande, taken at a very deliberate pace, was played rather stodgily.

On the other hand, the Brahms Symphony was fraught with an emotional intensity and drive which stirred the audience to give Mr. Koussevitzky and his band a real ovation. As with the "Spanish Caprice" which closed the program, this was an example of the Boston Symphony's incomparable virtuosity.

"Night on Mount Triglav" is a concert synthesis of the third act of Rimsky-Korsakov's opera-ballet, "Mlada." It contains a good many pages of tinsel novelty and some stunning orchestral effects. But a good deal of it is dull, too.

The program will be repeated this afternoon at 3.—J. W. R.

By ROBERTA MORRIER, 14

Ghosts and goblins everywhere;
Witches riding through the air;
Stars that twinkel in the sky,
Wink at witches riding by.
Many pumpkins warmly glow
On garden gates, high'n low;
They're waiting for the black cat

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (M. & E. 81,180)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony's Net Deficit for Season $41,712

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that its net deficit for the past season was $41,712 and that it expects a net deficit of $150,000 for present season. The orchestra is dependent in part on subscriptions.

This Clipping From NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Deficit

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT
BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — Th
Boston Symphony Orchestra re ported today in its first public fi nancial statement in recent year
that its net deficit for the seaso just past was $41,712 and the an ticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The sym phony is dependent partly on sub scriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

This Clipping From LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
NOV 22 1942

RECORD REVIEWS

By JOSEF ROSENBERG.

Beethoven: "Missa Solemnis" Opus 123. Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs at the organ with Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists. Album No. 1, six disks; Album No. 2, six disks. Victor.

This monumental work was planned by Beethoven as a tribute to his patron and pupil, Archduke Rudolph, on the occasion of his ordination as archbishop of Almutz. Although it was begun two years before in 1818, Beethoven was so engrossed with the mass and so intent on solving its manifold problems to his complete satisfaction, that it was not completed until two years too late for the ceremony. The Missa Solemnis ranks as one of the great masterpieces of religious music. That it meant much to Beethoven is evidenced by the inscription on the title page, "From the heart—may it be received by the heart."

Only in superlatives can one speak of the magnificence of the work from this recording. Mr. Koussevitzky co-ordinates his forces with mastery. The star of the performance, however, is the chorus, composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. These young people sing with vitality, beauty of tone and responsiveness that is beyond praise. Ineptitudes of writing for the voice seem not to exist for them. The opening "Kyrie" is electrical in its intensity, while the great climaxes of the "Gloria in Excelsis" are stunningly realized. The exultation "Qui tollis and the Et resurrexit" reveals the unfaltering inspiration and beauty of concept.

Not so many years ago having college glee clubs participate in so tremendous a musical undertaking would not have been dreamed of. That it should have been accomplished with such distinction is a striking evidence that musical America has come of age.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Deficit

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — Th
Boston Symphony Orchestra re ported today in its first public fi nancial statement in recent year
that its net deficit for the seaso
just past was $41,712 and the an ticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphor[illegible] said today that the [illegible] season [illegible]

In t[illegible] statem[illegible] years, [illegible] ficit w[illegible] 1434 [illegible] $63,93[illegible] to me[illegible]

Boston Symphony Orchestra has an estimated deficit of $150,000 for the 1942 season. Treasurer Henry B. Cabot says that so far, 1943 subscribers has contributed $63,000. This leaves $119,000 to be raised for the 1942-43 budget.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
[illegible] 0 1942

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
[illegible] 30 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

This Clipping From LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
NOV 22 1942

RECORD REVIEWS

By JOSEF ROSENBERG.

Beethoven: "Missa Solemnis" Opus 123. Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs at the organ with Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists. Album No. 1, six disks; Album No. 2, six disks. Victor.

This monumental work was [illegible]ned by Beethoven as a tribute [illegible]his patron and pupil, Archduke [illegible]dolph, on the occasion of his [illegible]lination as archbishop of Almutz. [illegible]though it was begun two years [illegible]fore in 1818, Beethoven was so [illegible]grossed with the mass and so in[illegible]nt on solving its manifold prob[illegible]ms to his complete satisfaction, [illegible]hat it was not completed until [illegible]wo years too late for the cere[illegible]mony. The Missa Solemnis ranks [illegible] one of the great masterpieces of [illegible]igious music. That it meant [illegible]ch to Beethoven is evidenced by [illegible] inscription on the title page, [illegible]rom the heart—may it be re[illegible]ived by the heart."

Only in superlatives can one [illegible]peak of the magnificence of the [illegible]ork from this recording. Mr. [illegible]oussevitzky co-ordinates his forces [illegible]with mastery. The star of the [illegible]erformance, however, is the chorus, composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. These young people sing with vitality, beauty of tone and responsiveness that is beyond praise. Ineptitudes of writing for the voice seem not to exist for them. The opening "Ky[illegible]e" is electrical in its intensity, while the great climaxes of the "Gloria in Excelsis" are stunningly realized. The exultation "Qui tollis and the Et resurrexit" reveals the unfaltering inspiration and beauty of concept.

Not so many years ago having college glee clubs participate in so tremendous a musical undertaking would not have been dreamed of. That it should have been accomplished with such distinction is a striking evidence that musical America has come of [illegible]

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 47,721) (S 29,799)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT
BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP)—
Boston Sym...
...s to be chosen
...hen there are
...pledged devo-
...are traditional

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 2,214)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

Circ. (D 15,045)

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
...0 1942

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
...0 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

This Clipping From LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
NOV 22 1942

RECORD REVIEWS

By JOSEF ROSENBERG.

Beethoven: "Missa Solemnis" Opus 123. Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs at the organ with Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists. Album No. 1, six disks; Album No. 2, six disks. Victor.

This monumental work was planned by Beethoven as a tribute to his patron and pupil, Archduke Rudolph, on the occasion of his ordination as archbishop of Almutz. Although it was begun two years before in 1818, Beethoven was so engrossed with the mass and so intent on solving its manifold problems to his complete satisfaction, that it was not completed until two years too late for the ceremony. The Missa Solemnis ranks as one of the great masterpieces of religious music. That it meant much to Beethoven is evidenced by the inscription on the title page, "From the heart—may it be received by the heart."

Only in superlatives can one speak of the magnificence of the work from this recording. Mr. Koussevitzky co-ordinates his forces with mastery. The star of the performance, however, is the chorus, composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. These young people sing with vitality, beauty of tone and responsiveness that is beyond praise. Ineptitudes of writing for the voice seem not to exist for them. The opening "Kyrie" is electrical in its intensity, while the great climaxes of the "Gloria in Excelsis" are stunningly realized. The exultation "Qui tollis and the Et resurrexit" reveals the unfaltering inspiration and beauty of concept.

Not so many years ago having college glee clubs participate in so tremendous a musical undertaking would not have been dreamed of. That it should have been accomplished with such distinction is a striking evidence that musical America has come of ...

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

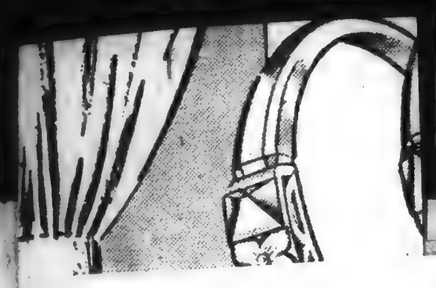
It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.



INFORMATION OBSCURED

$3 Navy, plaid, brown, models.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 47,721) (S 29,799)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

This Clipping From LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
NOV 22 1942

RECORD REVIEWS

By JOSEF ROSENBERG.

Beethoven: "Missa Solemnis" Opus 123. Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. E. Power Biggs at the organ with Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists. Album No. 1, six disks; Album No. 2, six disks. Victor.

This monumental work was planned by Beethoven as a tribute to his patron and pupil, Archduke Rudolph, on the occasion of his ordination as archbishop of Almutz. Although it was begun two years before in 1818, Beethoven was so engrossed with the mass and so intent on solving its manifold problems to his complete satisfaction, that it was not completed until two years too late for the ceremony. The Missa Solemnis ranks as one of the great masterpieces of religious music. That it meant much to Beethoven is evidenced by the inscription on the title page, "From the heart—may it be received by the heart."

Only in superlatives can one speak of the magnificence of the work from this recording. Mr. Koussevitzky co-ordinates his forces with mastery. The star of the performance, however, is the chorus, composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. These young people sing with vitality, beauty of tone and responsiveness that is beyond praise. Ineptitudes of writing for the voice seem not to exist for them. The opening "Kyrie" is electrical in its intensity, while the great climaxes of the "Gloria in Excelsis" are stunningly realized. The exultation "Qui tollis and the Et resurrexit" reveals the unfaltering inspiration and beauty of concept.

Not so many years ago having college glee clubs participate in so tremendous a musical undertaking would not have been dreamed of. That it should have been accomplished with such distinction is a striking evidence that musical America has come of age.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Defi

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — He
B. Cabot, treasurer of the Bos symphony orchestra, said to that the orchestra's estima
1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financ statement made public in seve years, Cabot said that the 1 deficit was $41,712 and that date 1434 subscribers have c tributed $63,938, leaving $119, to be raised to meet the 1942-1 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — Th
Boston Symphony Orchestra re ported today in its first public f nancial statement in recent year
that its net deficit for the seaso
just past was $41,712 and the an ticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

...ICIT

...oston
...d to-
...ancial
...t its
... past
...d net
... was
...pend-
...f the
... in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

...small a quarter of the required total, has already been raised in the campaign for funds for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jerome D. Greene, president of the orchestra's trustees, reports that this sum was contributed by 784 persons. Fifty-two of them are new members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The report on the old friends is that 335 have increased their subscriptions, 120 giving twice as much as formerly, eighty giving more than twice as much and one man giving ten times his usual subscription.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Deficit

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — T
Boston Symphony Orchestra r ported today in its first public f nancial statement in recent year
that its net deficit for the seaso
just past was $41,712 and the an ticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

Now everything has changed. Disheartening and quently lax and disheartening. hibited on the stage has been fre- ward), and the discipline it has ex- old seem simple and straightfor- world would make the Balkans of ternal politics of the entire ballet litigation of various sorts (the in- ballerinas. It has been engaged in

LOST $150,000

BOSTON, (U.P.)—Henry B. Cabot treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000. In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

ent which will appear in the t programs tomorrow and day.

the season eended in August, rchestra's income was $775,436, hich ticket sales in the regular n yielded $288,965 in Boston $170,933 in other cities, the urer reported. "Pop" (popular) erts added $138,341. Other items ncome listed included $82,365 in lties from sales of phonograph ords.

xpenditures aggregated $910,488, main item being $542,656 in aries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Deficit

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the orchestra, revealed the figures in a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
[illegible] 1942

Set $150,000 Deficit For Orchestra in Hub

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (UP)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

[19]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Runs At $150,000 Deficit

Boston, Oct. 30 (UP) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financ statement made public in seve years, Cabot said that the 19 deficit was $41,712 and that date 1434 subscribers have co tributed $63,938, leaving $119,0 to be raised to meet the 1942-19 budget.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY REPORTS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29. (AP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement [illegible] its past net was nd- the a statement which will appear in the concert programs tomorrow and Saturday.

For the season eended in August, the orchestra's income was $775,436, of which ticket sales in the regular season yielded $288,965 in Boston aand $170,933 in other cities, the treasurer reported. "Pop" (popular) concerts added $138,341. Other items of income listed included $82,365 in royalties from sales of phonograph records.

Expenditures aggregated $910,488, the main item being $542,656 in salaries.

Altogether the orchestra played 205 concerts in a season of 46 weeks in the 1941-42 period. The regular sesason consisted of 61 concerts in Boston and 45 in other cities; in addition 60 pop and 30 esplanade (outdoor) concerts were given.

"BESSERS"
"LOTS O' FUN"

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 29—(AP) The Boston Symphony orchestra reported tonight in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The Symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
OCT 30 1942

SYMPHONY HAS DEFICIT

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported today in its first public financial statement in recent years that its net deficit for the season just past was $41,712 and the anticipated net deficit for that now opening was $150,000. The symphony is dependent partly on subscriptions.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT
OCT 30 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY DEFICIT IS HIGH

Boston, Oct. 30 — (U.P.) — Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS
NEWS
OCT 30 1942

This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN & CITIZEN-LEADER
OCT 30 1942

Boston Symphony Deficit $150,000

BOSTON, Oct. 30 (INS)—Henry B. Cabot, treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra, said today that the orchestra's estimated 1942 season deficit is $150,000.

In the first detailed financial statement made public in several years, Cabot said that the 1941 deficit was $41,712 and that to date 1434 subscribers have contributed $63,938, leaving $119,054 to be raised to meet the 1942-1943 budget.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 25 1942

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Brilliant Concert at Metropolitan.

BY G. Y. LOVERIDGE

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose last night to demonstrate the Boston Symphony Orchestra primarily as the instrument of a virtuoso and as a complex virtuoso in itself. The large audience gathered in the Metropolitan Theatre enjoyed the exhibition mightily.

It was much as though a powerful and exuberant swimmer were to leap in and swim a fast hundred, not to save a life or win a race but for the sheer delight of moving through the water. With what rhythm of arm and leg, with what luxurious economy of effort, with what visible and invisible co-ordination he sweeps along! And, at the end, a lusty splash and shout.

The evening began with a suite by Corelli, arranged for strings by Ettore Pinelli. The celebrated Bostonians turned it off impeccably; they nowhere show their mastery more than in doing something easy. A brief symphony in one movement by Miaskovsky, a contemporary Russian, added a bit more weight, but not too much, to the well-calculated program. It is a work largely lyric and graceful, yet with a sufficient diversity of mood and means to sustain one's interest.

A suite from "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky, kept everything in the orchestra in a marvelous flutter. It is such a fascinating and superbly helter-skelter thing, with something popping up unexpectedly and then disappearing, with plodding masses of tone and nimble excursions in the woodwinds as though the orchestra had gone brilliantly mad.

The program pamphlet said that Jesus Maria Sanroma played the piano solo, but it looked a good deal like Zighera B., of the harp department. Whoever it was, was a very able pianist.

The superlative, perhaps inevitable, finish for an evening of this complexion was Tchaikovsky's Fourth. Whatever sombreness the composer may have been trying to convey was probably less apparent to the listeners than the spectacular execution of the pizzicato scherzo, the rich colors of brass, wood, and strings, and the controlled violence of the closing fortissimo.

The applause was above par.

At intermission, Mr. John Nicholas Brown explained the need of the orchestra for money. He praised the orchestra as the greatest in the world, recalled Providence's cultural debt to it, and asked for the financial support that it needs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 24 1942

Symphony's Friends

If you had a friend who was both kindly and renowned, and if that friend sometime came to need your help, you would want to give it. You would feel a personal and a public obligation; you would feel a pleasure in helping.

For at least four or five thousand persons in and about Providence, such a situation now exists. The friend who needs their help is the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Year after year, for more than half a century, the orchestra has visited Providence to acquaint us with the beauties of symphonic music. Tonight the orchestra will give its 268th concert in Providence. In the audience there may be one or two persons who have heard every concert the orchestra has played here, and there will be hundreds of others who have heard a score or a dozen. There will be a few who are hearing the orchestra for the first time. Whatever the length of the acquaintance, the orchestra stands in the relationship of a friend, one whose company we delight in.

It is a friend, too, whose achievements we admire. Everybody agrees that the Boston orchestra is one of the three or four finest in the world. Many consider it the very best. At any rate, its excellence is such that even persons who are not greatly interested in music, but have a general regard for the higher accomplishments of mankind, may well be concerned lest this orchestra decline or perish.

A fine orchestra, like a fine tree, requires many and favorable years for growing. If it is allowed to wither today, another one cannot be grown to replace it over night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is being attacked by a blight that is common to most institutions that grow from the arts. This blight is, in plain terms, a lack of money. It takes approximately one million dollars to finance the varied activities of the orchestra, including the concerts in Providence, every season. Revenues from concerts, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, recordings, and so on provide about 84 per cent. of this million dollars. The rest has been contributed in the past few years by a society known as the "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

In those years and for many years before the society was formed, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane were particularly generous contributors to the fund for cancelling the annual deficit. Mr. Dane died last April. Deprived of the assistance of this dependable friend, the orchestra had to carry over into this season a deficit of more than $38,000 from the past season. It is calculated that the deficit this season even with the utmost economy, will be $150,000. The orchestra has been trying to raise the $188,000 by Nov. 30. About $90,000 remains to be subscribed.

There are many "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" in Rhode Island. But not enough. Last year they gave approximately $2000. If every member of tonight's audience were to give even one dollar towards maintaining this splendid orchestra, it would amount to more than $3000. Everybody should try to give at least that much. Many will be able and glad to give much more.

The orchestra needs you. Be a friend.

[19]

NEW LEADER
NEW YORK, N.Y
11/21/42

CZAR PETRILLO MAN OF THE YEAR IN MUSIC

Shostakovitch Controversy

Raises Issue of Modern Music and the Masses

By PAUL STEFAN

FOUR MONTHS have passed since that sultry summer day when the radio brought us the new symphony of Dimitri Shostakovitch. Since then this work has been given a regular concert performance by Serge Koussevitsky and another radio performance by Toscanini. Koussevitsky is credited with the remark that no work since those of Beethoven has more deeply affected him. Toscanini, too, is counted among the enthusiasts—and this is as it should be, for how else could we have an inspired presentation? In this connection it is well to recall a remark once made by Mahler. After a brilliant interpretation, such as only Mahler could achieve, the composer came to give thanks to the great director and was told in the most kindly way: "But don't get the idea, my dear sir, that your composition is as good as it sounded here today."

This anecdote has no reference to Shostakovitch. His Seventh Symphony does not lose through repeated hearings. It may gain from an especially good performance, but it is not dependent on it. I must be allowed to question, however, whether the composition and the composer are to be ranked with Beethoven. There have been other great symphonic composers. But the more one thinks of Shostakovitch, the less important this question becomes. Here we certainly have a great musical creator composing a mighty symphony under the extraordinary conditions of working in a beleagured city in the moments which he could steal from his duties as civilian defense warden. And out of this hell of noise and confusion has come a work—leaving aside all stupid comparisons with the great of other centuries—the like of which we seldom hear. This work may, in fact, be unique.

Unique in this respect: there are today few musical works—or none—which have been so consciously written for the masses without degenerating into vulgarity. Here is actually the problem of this symphony, of this composer, of the entire school of the newest Russian music. Shostakovitch seems to be saying to his listeners: It is said that our modern music is unintelligible to you; very well, I will write it so that you can understand; not without reason have I been called the composer of the people; our Russian music, at least, shall belong to the people; what sort of folk music is this which the common people cannot understand?

But is other music of our day actually so difficult to understand? To be quite honest, one must regretfully reply: Yes, in no small part. The unintelligibility results less from unfamiliar sounds than from the overloading of the symbols as well as of the color. It stems most of all, however, from the fact that this music lacks the elementary, the connection with the folk-song and folk-dance and the basic appeal to the emotions. It is wanting in ethical values. The music of today is, often enough, nothing more than an almost mechanical form without content.

This lack is sensed by the audience. It was not always so. At the height of his power, a Mozart could write genuine folk-music—in his Magic Flute—and the people understood him. In the Vienna Prater, a place to be compared with Central Park, passages from Beethoven's latest quartets were performed in the open—promenade music, if you please—and these are works which even today offer difficulties of understanding. But the greatness of a Mozart, of a Beethoven, had its effect on the audience. It made people receptive even if they had no notion of pure music. They were conscious of the fact that a genius was speaking.

* * *

TWO THINGS constantly reappear in striking fashion in the development of music. On the one hand, great new works are often persecuted and denounced as heresies by professional musicians. On the other hand, the "unlettered" masses have often enough understood new music and received it warmly. Notable examples of both tendencies are to be found in Wagner's "Meistersinger."

Let us look at the new music of our time, of the twentieth century, and especially the music since the first World War. When the music characteristic of this period was heard for the first time, many were inspired by its novelty and conceived the hope that from this would develop a new age, a change in the direction of a new greatness, a magnificent upward swing of the sort that musical history has exhibited only rarely. And the music of these last decades actually brought to expression a few real geniuses. Think of Debussy and Ravel, Honegger and Milhaud, Schoenberg and Alban Berg, Hindesmith and Stravinsky. But often enough greatness and significance were lacking. Often enough the composers never transcended the frivolous desire to be new, to be different. This fact could not be hidden. When the public took note that music was being produced like any other merchandise, as mere merchandise, as propaganda, it lost interest. Between men to whom mere change had become the motivating principle, to whom increasing mechanization was the chief object—between them and the public appeared an ever widening abyss. This word, abyss, now haunts every discussion of the relation between music and the public.

Here in America the frequenters of symphony concerts stick consistently to Tschaikovsky and Sibelius. In Europe they are loyal to Bruckner and Mahler. Bruckner did not think of a public, but he achieved one. Mahler, on the other hand, was a philosopher of music and consciously devised his compositions to draw listeners. But he desired a public which would come to him on his own terms, one which would be swept up to the level of his own thoughts. To his people, thus drawn to him, he spoke very directly and simply. He was, therefore, doing thirty or more yeare ago precisely what Shostakovitch does today—excepting that behind him stood no official Soviet power. He stood alone. Since this parallel is not to be disregarded, a good many persons in this country think that Shostakovitch derives from Mahler. This opinion is justifiable and is far from being deprecatory. It seems to be the fact, however, that Shostakovitch is only unconsciously indebted to Mahler. It is reported, at least, that only recently has he had Mahler's scores sent to him in Russia. Is it possible that he has not been acquainted with them?

We should not judge Shostakovitch's new symphony—or, in fact, the art of Shostakovitch as a whole—on the basis of all sorts of incidentals such as echoes from other composers or comparisons with Beethoven. The real service of this man lies elsewhere. [illegible] have recognized the fact that

The Angelic Petrillo

James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, will not down as a public-spirited citizen. To be sure he has effectively suppressed the transcription industry, has prevented the public from enjoying new musical recordings and has kept students at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music off the air. But he has graciously offered the services of his union members to make morale records for Army camps. The OWI has said, "No, thanks," and now he comes forth with $500,000 of union funds to subsidize free concerts in small towns by the members of the major symphony orchestras.

Anything to expand the availability of good music is a worthy cause. Arthur Fiedler, on a bus tour with fifteen musicians through Pennsylvania and Virginia, found an amazing welcome from folks who rarely or never had seen a symphony orchestra in the flesh. But Petrillo as an "angel" for the sticks is something of an incongruity. With one hand he denies the small towns the privilege of hearing new music from the small radio stations, which must rely on recordings. With the other he offers to dispense half a million to let them look on players in person!

UNION ISSUES

A. F. M. Against the Virtuosi and A. F. M. Against Boston Symphony

By JACK GOULD

A DOUBLE-BARRELED dispute between the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the vocal and instrumental virtuosi and the rank and file union musicians has presented the world of melody with the gravest crisis in many a year.

The cast of characters is all-star. There is James Caesar Petrillo, the stocky two-fisted president of the American Federation of Musicians; Lawrence Tibbett, the baritone and idealistic leader of the American Guild of Musical Artists, and the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony.

The immediate cause of the controversy was Mr. Petrillo's announcement, succinctly couched in the first person singular, that the Boston Symphony was "through" because it was non-union and that Jascha Heifetz, Albert Spalding, José Iturbi, Efrem Zimbalist and other instrumental virtuosi must join his fold or be denied access to phonograph records, the radio networks, motion pictures and such concert programs as employ his members. The Boston Symphony maintained its traditional silence on matters pertaining to the union, but Mr. Tibbett prepared for a war which very easily might assume the proportions of last Summer's battle between the actors and the stagehands.

* * *

As is always true of theatrical differences, the present issues are not simple.

The American Guild of Musical Artists was originally formed by a group of concert artists and instrumentalists to represent them on matters of copyright legislation, bills pertaining to bars on the admission of alien performers and the like. It rapidly moved, however, toward bona fide unionism.

At the time, the American Federation of Labor charter for concert singers was held by the Grand Opera Artists Association, which barred the way to full unionism for the Guild. Help came in the form of Kenneth Thomson, executive secretary of the Screen Actors Guild, and Laurence Beilenson, the S. A. G. attorney, who decided the time was ripe for a housecleaning in the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, parent of all performer unions. Previously the Four A's had been dominated by the Actors Equity Association and its president, Frank Gillmore.

In due course, thanks to some hastily enacted union legislation, the Four A's took the charter away from the G. O. A. A. and awarded it to the Guild. Little thought was given at the time to the question of whether the inclusion of the instrumentalists did or did not go beyond the bounds of the Four A's.

There was no particular reason for the actor officials to worry over the question of jurisdiction since the American Federation of Musicians, the only logical contender to the field, had by its own admission ignored the instrumentalists.

Mr. Petrillo justified his steps on a purely union basis. He said that Heifetz, Iturbi, Zimbalist and Spalding were primarily musicians and the A. F. of L. charter to his organization clearly grants him the right to organize them. The directness of his approach precipitated widespread editorial criticism, but that he is not alone in his labor union conception was substantiated by the subsequent action of Actors Equity in indirectly questioning the "rightful jurisdiction" of the Guild.

Mr. Petrillo made it clear that the issue of the instrumentalists was closely linked with that of the Boston Symphony. By organizing the virtuosos his union would be able to control their places of appearance, he believed, and this would go a long way toward organizing Serge Koussevitzky's ensemble, the only major non-union group in the country.

Specifically, he felt that it was unfair for Arturo Toscanini and Leopold Stokowski to be barred by union rules from directing the Boston Symphony while Heifetz shifted from union to non-union bands. He likewise held that other orchestras, such as the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Philadelphia, were at a competitive disadvantage.

But it is the means as much as the end that finds the Guild officials in sharp disagreement with Mr. Petrillo. They feel that their instrumentalists constitute Mr. Petrillo's "Sudetenland" in his war with the Boston Symphony, and that regardless of the cultural consequences he is imposing the law of the jungle over the law of honorable discussion.

* * *

The problems of the instrumentalists, the Guild maintains, are poles apart from that of the average musician. The Guild is almost wholly concerned with the individual contractual relationship between the soloist and a management; the American Federation of Musicians on the other hand must determine wages, hours and other group working conditions. The instrumentalists believe that the Guild with its total of 1,800 members suits their needs, whereas they would be lost among the 158,000 members of Mr. Petrillo's organization.

The Guild argues that the instrumental virtuoso, not to say the vocal virtuoso, is a performing artist rather than a musician in the accepted sense. He is the box-office draw in almost all cases, and both from the standpoints of art and his physical presentation on the stage he is the "show."

In the Guild's opinion the virtuoso in particular has an important part to contribute to American culture, a part which he cannot properly play if he is denied the right of self-government. It was noted by the Guild that for all his apparent indifference to the cultural and artistic aspect of music that Mr. Petrillo's members in the large symphonies earn a livelihood from organizations which are not going concerns in the financial sense, and are kept alive only through the generosity of public-spirited citizens.

In this summary of the controversies prevailing in the music industry it is impossible to present with comparable completeness the position of the Boston Symphony. George Judd, manager of the orchestra, has consistently declined to enter into the debate other than to deny that the will of Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, contained a provision prohibiting the employment of union musicians.

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

FOR music's "man of the year," this department nominates James Caesar Petrillo. Not that it admires or even condones some of his strong-arm methods. In point of fact, it has lambasted him plenty on more than one occasion. But the president of the American Federation of Musicians gets things done. He has made history in this year of 1942. He has also been made the subject of more news and editorial comment than any other six individuals in the musical field. And while it is well known that he himself has not failed to prosper, he has, nevertheless, striven mightily in behalf of a profession that has not always benefited by the march of science. Remember when every movie theatre of any size had its own orchestra? And some fairer division of the spoils may come from his drastic attitude in the matter of recordings. One takes less kindly to his radio bannings, particularly as regards to student orchestras, like the one at Interlochen, Mich., about which there was such an agitation last summer; but such things have a way of straightening themselves out.

Perhaps, now that he has won his long battle with the Boston Symphony, Mr. Petrillo will become less truculent and aggressive. After all, it was a considerable victory, even if the trustees did put over a bit of what someone has called shrewd Yankee trading in getting certain concessions and in virtually changing the status of symphony musicians throughout the country.

One important result of the new order of things is the series of Boston Symphony broadcasts that began at 8:15 last evening and will continue at that hour for an hour on Saturday evenings throughout the season. When it comes to the Pops and the Esplanade concerts a new hour must be found, but that is nobody's worry just yet. It is a pity that a longer period could not have been granted. This hour of music before the intermission, no more, no less, makes Dr. Koussevitzky's task rather complicated and is likely to result in oddly balanced programmes. In fact it has done so already. And what is to be the fate of symphonies that consume more than an hour? Will they be dropped from the repertory or will they be broadcast only in part? Certainly there will be no time for them after the intermission.

Next week, for example, the radio audience will get the Introduction and March from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Le Coq d'Or," the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovantchina" and the Sixth Symphony of Shostakovitch. After the intermission will come the first Wagner in two seasons in the "Siegfried Idyl" and the "Meistersinger" Prelude. Speaking of Symphony programmes, that of tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon will comprise the Corelli-Pinelli Suite recently heard, the Third Symphony of Brahms and the Third Act of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Mlada" and his "Spanish Caprice."

[20]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Petrillo, the Man Who Has Been Saying W

By K. S. BARTLETT Globe 11/24

If a resident of one of the poorest sections of Chicago back at the turn of the century hadn't fancied himself as a scout of future cornetists, the whole musical scene in these United States today might be different.

Said amateur talent scout observed the full lips of a neighbor's 8-year-old boy, told the father: "He'll make a cornetist," and expanded on the more or less mythical value thereof. So impressed was the boy's father that he invested $24 of the money he earned digging Chicago sewers on a cornet sent all the way from his native Italy. He spent some more on a teacher for the boy.

"Loud But Lousy"

It was a paying investment. Today the boy's salary is said to be around $46,000 a year, although not for playing the cornet.

"I was loud, but lousy" is the way James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, characterizes his attempts to set the wild echoes flying via the brass.

He's sent plenty flying since and, while his enemies may claim that some of his efforts have been lousy, few probably would dispute that they've been loud.

Petrillo has been a fighter all his life and right now he's in one of the biggest of them. A Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee is investigating his union's ban on recordings and transcriptions for radio stations and juke boxes, a ban which Asst. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold last week called "an attack upon industrial freedom."

Elmer Davis, director of the office of War Information told the committee that the ban "threatens the continued existence" of many smaller radio stations vitally necessary to the national war effort. Further he said that juke boxes—of which he admitted he wasn't any addict—are "highly popular with soldiers, sailors and Marines" both at home and overseas and with factory workers.

Beside the Washington hearing, the Department of Justice has filed a bill in equity against the Federation alleging violation of the anti-trust laws. Counsel for the Federation say that the ban was not ordered by Petrillo individually, but was the result of action voted in convention by the A. F. M. It would be impossible to find a more patriotic man than the union chief, counsel said.

Petrillo came up the hard way. He sold newspapers and fought with other boys. Once he is credited with having taken on nine youngsters, his size and larger. He battled in succession and disposed of them all in two hours. His formal education ended before he had finished grammar school.

Before then he had been launched in the musical world. At 10 he was playing in the Hull House Band and the late Jane Addams liked his rendering of "The Rosary" so well that she gave him a baseball cap and a pair of gym shoes. To this day "The Rosary" is Petrillo's favorite.

PETRILLO

An Organizer at 14

When he was 14 Petrillo was the organizer and cornetist of an orchestra of eight boys. The local union is said to have given him special permission to join, although he was under age. Soon after that he switched to the drums, some say because he had "lost his lip," a technical catastrophe which all cornetists will understand. He had other business enterprises, among them a cigar stand. At another time he was a partner in a saloon taking the day shift so that he could play at night. It is said that if the Chicago Cubs, whose park on those days wasnt far away, had a good hot fight on, the bar was left to look out for itself while Petrillo tried to root the home nine to victory.

Petrillo was elected president of the American Musicians' Union, then an independent Chicago organization, when he was 22. That was in 1914. He served three years, then was defeated for reelection. The following year he left the A. M. U. and joined up with the Chicago local of the Federation. Two years later he was vice president, five years later he sat down in the president's chair of the local.

At that time his salary was $100 a week and the local had 4000 members. Now it has 11,000 and a substantially higher wage scale than any of the American Federation of Musicians 750 other locals. It pays him $26,000 a year. He gets $20,000 as president of the national organization, making him the highest paid of any union leader in the country.

His "boys," as he calls the Chicago group, like him very much. From time to time they have given him presents. In 1937, when they heard he would like a peaceful country week-end place they bought him an old estate on Lake Geneva in Wisconsin, paying $25,000 for it plus $12,000 for furnishings.

He has been called "the best dressed labor leader" in the United States. He wears a silk hat with aplomb. Also a 2½ carat diamond on the first finger of his left hand. He used to pay $150 for suits. He stays at expensive hotels when he travels. He enjoys all this hugely. He takes pride in his success and his personal record.

Has Plenty of Courage

He's short, heavily built, carrying 180 pounds on a 5ft. 6in. frame. His hair is gray, unruly, thinning fast, his eyes light blue. When he's in a good temper he looks like the world's friend. When he isn't—well, he looks just as tough as his opponents picture him.

He has plenty of personal courage. In 1933 there was a story, never cleared up satisfactorily, that he had been kidnaped by Chicago gangsters and held for ransom of $50,000. Petrillo has always denied the story. A few years later it was reported that some enemy had been taking pot shots at him or his car. Bullet marks were found on the bulletproof glass of the rear window of a car he had traded in.

Questioned, Petrillo said in effect, sure they were bullet marks. He'd had a detective fire several shots at the window to see whether the glass was really bulletproof.

He is devoted to his family. In his Chicago office is a picture of a 13-year-old boy, Petrillo's son Lester, who died 10 years ago as a result of an infection following a football injury. To this day the elder Petrillo hates the game. But when another son wanted to go out for football at Notre Dame a few years ago the father did not object. In fact, the story goes, that when his son didn't make the varsity, Petrillo told the Chicago Mayor to telephone and find o layed expl

Coach Eln Petrillo ha him at onc Petrillo's is startling according of the Dep solute and far as the tion are c 130,000 mu are higher of the mus
the stage, and on rec
His meth attacked b ganization.
sicians' w hours, and eficial refo many oppo the Chicag head of the well.
One of has been w Orchestra.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 11 1943

UNION PROTESTS PETRILLO SCHEME

New York, Aug. 11.—(INS)—More than 700 members of Local 802 of James C. Petrillo's own American Federation of Musicians today protested against the music czar's plan to have major symphonic orchestras give free concerts in small American cities.

The free concert idea was Petrillo's reply to the charge that the AFM's ban on musical recordings was depriving millions of the chance to hear symphonic music.

The union musicians, in their protest, asked that instead of using musicians already employed by large symphony orchestras, Petrillo employ totally or partially unemployed musicians.

The protest was issued without the consent of the local union's leaders, Jacob Rosenberg and William Feinberg, against whom there has been increasing opposition.

Meantime 11 of the nation's leading symphonic orchestras joined in a plea to Petrillo to lift the ban on recordings. In telegrams to Marshall Field, president of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, the orchestral groups chorused their approval of the Philharmonic's stand against the restriction.

Joining with the New York group were the symphonic orchestras of Los Angeles, Rochester, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis, Boston, Cleveland, San Francisco and Washington.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
NOV 20 1942

Orchestra Does Play

NEW YORK—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned here last night to begin its 57th season and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once. For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall. But they did last night.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
SEP 24 1941

Discord Among Musicians

Professional musicians in this country have had a difficult path to travel in recent years. They have had to meet the depression, as did all other groups, and they have had to contend with sharp competition from the various mechanical devices that ingenuity has put on a market. Now that better times seem at hand, they are sorely beset by labor organization troubles.

James Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians admits he is a dictator if the qualifying adjective "benevolent" is used in connection with the term, but his activities frequently make the application of that word highly dubious. At the moment, he is engaged in attacks on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, long a thorn in his side. It is the only large orchestra in the country whose members do not pay dues in his organization and, moreover, it enjoys an outstanding reputation for musicianship. Mr. Petrillo's latest move against the Boston Symphony is to rule that Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, distinguished violinists who are members of his organization, cannot appear as soloists with the orchestra. Zimbalist and Szigeti have expressed their regrets as artists and doubtless feel some qualms of personal interest at the prospect of the loss of fees.

This is another instance of a union dispute in which no question of wages or working conditions is involved. The members of the Boston Symphony apparently are quite satisfied to stay out of Mr. Petrillo's organization. They are said to receive better pay than the union scale. Mr. Petrillo is endeavoring to coerce them by one means or another into joining. These jurisdictional struggles are showing a defect in the Wagner National Labor Relations Act that it was theoretically designed to remedy. One of its objectives was to bring democracy into industry and to enable workers to decide freely what union they wanted to join or whether they wanted to join one at all. In practice it has not reached that objective. Attention is directed to this fact anew by this discord among musicians.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 15 1943

UNION OK AFTER ALL FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Boston, Sept. 14.

Having given a record of 304 concerts in the 365 days of its 62d season, the Boston Symphony orchestra figures its union debut was okay after all.

Besides the two regular series of concerts, of 48 and 12 concerts respectively, the BSO had nine weeks of Pop concerts, four weeks of Esplanade concerts, 14 'summer symphonies' of the first desk men, a longer tour than ever during the season, several dozen concerts at army and navy bases, and renewed its RCA Victor recording and CBS broadcasting contracts.

It performed before nearly a million people, and grossed nearly $1,000,000. It lost only two men to the armed forces. Koussevitzky returns for the forthcoming season beginning Oct. 8.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
NOV 20 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS IN NEW YORK; FINDS UNION SILENT

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned Thursday night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its head once. For many weeks while negotaitions have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians' Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not-yet-unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused Thursday night to comment in any way on the situation. It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this season.

[21]

Boston Symphony May Join Union, Official Hints

Dr. Koussevitzky Asserts He's Ready to Join If Whole Orchestra Does

Aug 18 Globe

Several hints were given today that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, is on the verge of conquering in his two-year battle to get the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into the ranks of his union.

The orchestra for several years has been the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

A responsible official of the orchestra, who would not permit his name to be used, refused to deny that negotiations are now going on to sign up the symphonic musicians as union members.

"Anything can happen in this world," he said. "I couldn't be a prophet."

At his home in Lenox, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's union, disclosed that he was ready to join Mr. Petrillo's outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He would go in "automatically" in that case, he said.

As for whether negotiations are under way, "I don't know nothing about it—I tell you frankly," said Dr. Koussevitzky. He pointed out that he has been occupied for the last six weeks conducting at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The series finished yesterday. He said he was not scheduled to rejoin the Boston Symphony until Oct. 1.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
NOV 20 1942

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long-term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Petrillo, the Man Who Ha[illegible]ying Who

By K. S. BARTLETT Globe Sept 27

If a resident of one of the poorest sections of Chicago back at the turn of the century hadn't fancied himself as a scout of future cornetists, the whole musical scene in these United States today might be different.

Said amateur talent scout observed the full lips of a neighbor's 8-year-old boy, told the father: "He'll make a cornetist," and expanded on the more or less mythical value thereof. So impressed was the boy's father that he invested $24 of the money he earned digging Chicago sewers on a cornet sent all the way from his native Italy. He spent some more on a teacher for the boy.

"Loud But Lousy"

It was a paying investment. Today the boy's salary is said to be around $46,000 a year, although not for playing the cornet.

"I was loud, but lousy" is the way James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, characterizes his attempts to set the wild echoes flying via the brass.

He's sent plenty flying since and, while his enemies may claim that some of his efforts have been lousy, few probably would dispute that they've been loud.

Petrillo has been a fighter all his life and right now he's in one of the biggest of them. A Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee is investigating his union's ban on recordings and transcriptions for radio stations and juke boxes, a ban which Asst. Atty. Gen. Thurman Arnold last week called "an attack upon industrial freedom."

Elmer Davis, director of the office of War Information told the committee that the ban "threatens the continued existence" of many smaller radio stations vitally necessary to the national war effort. Further he said that juke boxes—of which he admitted he wasn't any addict—are "highly popular with soldiers, sailors and Marines" both at home and overseas and with factory workers.

Beside the Washington hearing, the Department of Justice has filed a bill in equity against the Federation alleging violation of the anti-trust laws. Counsel for the Federation say that the ban was not ordered by Petrillo individually, but was the result of action voted in convention by the A. F. M. It would be impossible to find a more patriotic man than the union chief, counsel said.

Petrillo came up the hard way. He sold newspapers and fought with other boys. Once he is credited with having taken on nine youngsters, his size and larger. He battled in succession and disposed of them all in two hours. His formal education ended before he had finished grammar school.

Before then he had been launched in the musical world. At 10 he was playing in the Hull House Band and the late Jane Addams liked his rendering of "The Rosary" so well that she gave him a baseball cap and a pair of gym shoes. To this day "The Rosary" is Petrillo's favorite.

PETRILLO

An Organizer at 14

When he was 14 Petrillo was the organizer and cornetist of an orchestra of eight boys. The local union is said to have given him special permission to join, although he was under age. Soon after that he switched to the drums, some say because he had "lost his lip," a technical catastrophe which all cornetists will understand. He had other business enterprises, among them a cigar stand. At another time he was a partner in a saloon taking the day shift so that he could play at night. [illegible]tough as his op-Chicago Cu[illegible]n. days wasn[illegible] of personal cour-hot fight on[illegible]re was a story, look out fo[illegible]atisfactorily, that tried to roo[illegible]aped by Chicago tory.

Petrillo w[illegible]d for ransom of the Americ[illegible]as always denied an indepen[illegible]w years later it tion, when h[illegible] some enemy had 1914. He [illegible]shots at him or was defeat[illegible]arks were found following y[illegible] glass of the rear and joined[illegible]he had traded in. local of the[illegible]illo said in effect, later he w[illegible]llet marks. He'd years later[illegible] fire several shots president's c[illegible] see whether the bulletproof.

At that ti[illegible]c his family. In a week an[illegible] is a picture of members. [illegible]y. Petrillo's son substantially[illegible]0 years ago as a any of the [illegible]ion following a Musicians 75[illegible] To this day the him $26,000[illegible]s the game. But as presiden[illegible] wanted to go out zation, mak[illegible]re Dame a few of any unio[illegible]er did not object.

His "boy[illegible] goes, that when group, like[illegible]ke the varsity, time to tim[illegible]hicago Mayor to presents. In[illegible] he would like a [illegible] week-end place they bought him a old estate on Lake Geneva in Wisconsin, paying $25,000 for it plu[illegible] $12,000 for furnishings.

He has been called "the best dressed labor leader" in the United States. He wears a silk hat with aplomb. Also a 2½ carat diamond on the first finger of his left hand. He used to pay $150 for suits. He stays at expensive hotels when he travels. He enjoys all this hugely. He takes pride in his success and his personal record.

Has Plenty of Courage

He's short, heavily built, carrying 180 pounds on a 5ft. 6in. frame. His hair is gray, unruly, thinning fast, his eyes light blue. When he's in a good temper he looks like the world's friend. When he isn't—well, telephone Notre Dame's presi[illegible] and find out "how come." The[illegible] layed explanation from then [illegible] Coach Elmer Layden that [illegible] Petrillo had a bad shoulder pa[illegible] him at once.

Petrillo's power in union a[illegible] is startling to outsiders. They [illegible] according to the antitrust div[illegible] of the Department of Justice [illegible] solute and subject to no contr[illegible] far as the members of the F[illegible] wn[illegible] tion are concerned. That's a [illegible] 130,000 musicians—some est[illegible] are higher, and they furnish [illegible] of the music the country hea[illegible] the stage, on the air, in restau[illegible] and on records.

His methods have been viol[illegible] attacked by nonmembers of his ganization. But he has raised sicians' wages greatly, shorte[illegible] hours, and accomplished many [illegible] eficial reforms. He has tangled [illegible] many opponents, both as head the Chicago local and since 194[illegible] head of the national organizatio[illegible] well.

One of his most famous bat[illegible] has been with the Boston Symph[illegible] Orchestra. He's won some of

Boston Symphony May Join Union, Official Hints

Dr. Koussevitzky Asserts He's Ready to Join If Whole Orchestra Does

Aug 18 Globe

Several hints were given today that James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, is on the verge of conquering in his two-year battle to get the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into the ranks of his union.

The orchestra for several years has been the only major non-union orchestra in the country.

A responsible official of the orchestra, who would not permit his name to be used, refused to deny that negotiations are now going on to sign up the symphonic musicians as union members.

"Anything can happen in this world," he said. "I couldn't be a prophet."

At his home in Lenox, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and one of the few major American conductors still outside Mr. Petrillo's union, disclosed that he was ready to join Mr. Petrillo's outfit if the rest of the orchestra does. He would go in "automatically" in that case, he said.

As for whether negotiations are under way, "I don't know nothing about it—I tell you frankly," said Dr. Koussevitzky. He pointed out that he has been occupied for the last six weeks conducting at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The series finished yesterday. He said he was not scheduled to rejoin the Boston Symphony until Oct. 1.

This Clipping From PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 11 1943

UNION PROTESTS PETRILLO SCHEME

New York, Aug. 11.—(INS)—More than 700 members of Local 802 of James C. Petrillo's own American Federation of Musicians today protested against the music czar's plan to have major symphonic orchestras give free concerts in small American cities.

The free concert idea was Petrillo's reply to the charge that the AFM's ban on musical recordings was depriving millions of the chance to hear symphonic music.

The union musicians, in their protest, asked that instead of using musicians already employed by large symphony orchestras, Petrillo employ totally or partially unemployed musicians.

The protest was issued without the consent of the local union's leaders, Jacob Rosenberg and William Feinberg, against whom there has been increasing opposition.

Meantime 11 of the nation's leading symphonic orchestras joined in a plea to Petrillo to lift the ban on recordings. In telegrams to Marshall Field, president of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, the orchestral groups chorused their approval of the Philharmonic's stand against the restriction.

Joining with the New York group were the symphonic orchestras of Los Angeles, Rochester, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis, Boston, Cleveland, San Francisco and Washington.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES UNION
NOV 20 1942

Orchestra Does Play

NEW YORK—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned here last night to begin its 57th season and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once. For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall. But they did last night.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
SEP 24 1941

Discord Among Musicians

Professional musicians in this country have had a difficult path to travel in recent years. They have had to meet the depression, as did all other groups, and they have had to contend with sharp competition from the various mechanical devices that ingenuity has put on a market. Now that better times seem at hand, they are sorely beset by labor organization troubles.

James Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians admits he is a dictator if the qualifying adjective "benevolent" is used in connection with the term, but his activities frequently make the application of that word highly dubious. At the moment, he is engaged in attacks on the Boston Symphony Orchestra, long a thorn in his side. It is the only large orchestra in the country whose members do not pay dues in his organization and, moreover, it enjoys an outstanding reputation for musicianship. Mr. Petrillo's latest move against the Boston Symphony is to rule that Efrem Zimbalist and Joseph Szigeti, distinguished violinists who are members of his organization, cannot appear as soloists with the orchestra. Zimbalist and Szigeti have expressed their regrets as artists and doubtless feel some qualms of personal interest at the prospect of the loss of fees.

This is another instance of a union dispute in which no question of wages or working conditions is involved. The members of the Boston Symphony apparently are quite satisfied to stay out of Mr. Petrillo's organization. They are said to receive better pay than the union scale. Mr. Petrillo is endeavoring to coerce them by one means or another into joining. These jurisdictional struggles are showing a defect in the Wagner National Labor Relations Act that it was theoretically designed to remedy. One of its objectives was to bring democracy into industry and to enable workers to decide freely what union they wanted to join or whether they wanted to join one at all. In practice it has not reached that objective. Attention is directed to this fact anew by this discord among musicians.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 15 1943

UNION OK AFTER ALL FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Boston, Sept. 14.

Having given a record of 304 concerts in the 365 days of its 62d season, the Boston Symphony orchestra figures its union debut was okay after all.

Besides the two regular series of concerts, of 48 and 12 concerts respectively, the BSO had nine weeks of Pop concerts, four weeks of Esplanade concerts, 14 'summer symphonies' of the first desk men, a longer tour than ever during the season, several dozen concerts at army and navy bases, and renewed its RCA Victor recording and CBS broadcasting contracts.

It performed before nearly a million people, and grossed nearly $1,000,000. It lost only two men to the armed forces. Koussevitzky returns for the forthcoming season beginning Oct. 8.

This Clipping From BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
NOV 20 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS IN NEW YORK; FINDS UNION SILENT

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned Thursday night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its head once. For many weeks while negotaitions have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians' Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not-yet-unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused Thursday night to comment in any way on the situation. It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this season.

[21]

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
NOV 20 1942

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its 57th season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the Musicians Union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the symphony began its usual season in Providence, and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter. Although nearly every American symphony has found its subscription somewhat off this season, due to transportation trouble, reluctance to make long-term commitments and such like, the Boston subscription in New York is equal to last year, Mr. Judd says, and perhaps a shade better.

ORCHESTRA IN UNION

Nov. 29 1942

Effects of Agreement Between Boston Symphony and Musicians Federation

By OLIN DOWNES

THE deadlock between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians Union has ended. The Boston orchestra, whose founder, Major Henry L. Higginson, would rather have had the orchestra pass out of existence than see it happen, has joined the union. The union, on its side, has yielded some very important points on procedure to the orchestra. The arrangement is such as to benefit both parties to the agreement, and to raise standards of orchestra personnel and symphonic performance the country over.

It need not be claimed that the considerations which brought the orchestra and the union together were of the purely artistic order, or that the intense and bitter antagonisms of the past were not in the historical background of the picture. Irresistible forces of this period compelled cooperative action on both sides. It was not merely the sentiment that is now nation-wide for collective action and bargaining. It was plain facts.

Weapons of Each Side

The orchestra faced an economic problem which was anything but a simple one. The union faced a situation which made it imperative that the finest existing symphony orchestra, and the one orchestra which had quietly and successfully resisted up to the present time every pressure to force it to do so, should come into the fold. One of the union's cards in the game might be designated as force majeur, in the form of the edict it could issue to the radio and record companies, forbidding them under the letter of contractual agreement to cease broadcasting or record-making of Boston Symphony performances.

It was a powerful weapon in the situation but not one to which the Boston Symphony would necessarily have yielded if it had not been able to secure modifications in union regulations of the past affecting the orchestra's rights in the engagement of players, the adjustment of rehearsal hours and associated matters which could affect standards of personnel and performance, and the complete freedom of the organiaztion to pursue its artistic purposes unhindered by union red tape or supervision. It is distinctly to the credit of Mr. Petrillo and his cohorts that they saw the point, realised the temper of the organization with which they were dealing and sufficiently modified their conditions to change the whole orchestral situation in this country.

Old Methods Going

We spoke of the conditions which had acted behind the scenes in this little drama of adjustment. The day when public-spirited patrons of art will pay individually the heavy deficits of a symphony orchestra season, and dictate policy in so doing, are nearing their end. The older principles of orchestra maintenance still operate in this city, where the Philharmonic-Symphony deficits are met by individuals, especially one individual of the orchestra board, who put their hands in their pockets and pay the bills without which the orchestra would pass out of existence.

It is New York's good fortune that this is so, and we have in other places munificent persons whose aid to serious music puts the community and also the professional musicians very much in their debt. But this is not a condition that can be reckoned upon much longer, or one upon which musical unionism can impose. The financial aid upon which orchestras and opera companies which observe union wage scales must in part rely is the income to be derived from radio sponsors and from record sales. In Boston, since the death of the late Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees, there was no person or group of persons willing to meet from their own resources the deficit which accrued, in spite of admirably efficient and economical management, at the end of each season. The Bostonians were faced with a fact. The resumption of radio and record engagements would almost certainly enable the orchestra to wipe out its annual deficits and operate on a balanced budget. This could not be ignored.

In the meantime, and most fortunately, there had come about in the space of a very few years an amazing change in the artistic status of the young American orchestra player. Until the time of the First World War the best players, with some notable exceptions, were those who came from Europe. Those players had a technical and stylistic endowment that few American trained musicians could boast. The Boston orchestra and the other orchestras who sought its level of excellence combed the European field for their personnel.

Problems of Import

Then came labor laws and more latterly quota rulings which made it much harder to get foreign artists into the country and the orchestras than had been the case before. A player from Europe, especially one who intended to enter the Boston Symphony, went through a long legal rigmarole before he could join. He had to enter the country as a visitor, stay here a certain number of months, then be offered a contract by the Boston Symphony and finally be enrolled. Naturally, when a musician from overseas took such an important step he insisted upon a good contract and a fairly long one. This made for rigidity in the arrangements.

Today the best orchestral players are American. It is incontestably the fact, resulting partly from the devastation of the world wars, but also from the sound training young orchestral musicians undergo in our high schools and in some universities and leading American music schools today. Each season a number of remarkably equipped young men, and women too, come from these sources. Even if there were not labor and emigration restrictions, it would still be wasteful for orchestra managements to go elsewhere than to their own country for their membership. The native musician, moreover, is much

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
NOV 20 1942

Orchestra Wins Bow From Union

Boston Symphony Plays In N. Y. Despite Ban Ordered by Labor

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, Nov. 20 (AP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra returned last night to begin its fifty-seventh season in New York, and the union issue failed to raise its naughty head once.

For many weeks while negotiations have been pending between the trustees of the 62-year-old orchestra and the musicians' union there have been rumors that Serge Koussevitzky's not yet unionized men would not be permitted to play in any union hall.

No announcement of any agreement has been made, yet last month the sympathy began its usual season in Providence, R. I., and this week it has played engagements in Hartford and New Haven, Conn. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, refused last night to comment in any way on the situation, and would not confirm or deny the fact that negotiations were still in progress.

It made no difference to the huge audience, the largest that has heard an orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall this winter. Dr. Koussevitzky played two symphonies for his opening—Haydn's 88th in G major, and Dmitri Shostakovich's now famous Seventh. ~~It required~~ 69½ minutes actual playing time for the orchestra to traverse the Shostakovich score, 3½ minutes more than Arturo Toscanini needed four weeks ago.

development take place in the course of his nineteen years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He availed himself of it long before the problem of unionism had become a pressing one. When he came here he found an orchestra principally of elderly men. He put American youth into the organization and gave its personnel the intensive drilling which has made the Boston Symphony the unrivaled symphonic body that it is today.

What the union has conceded in the new agreement has an importance which does not apply only to its arrangements with the Boston Symphony. If correctly reported, it means that henceforth an orchestra management will not be hampered in engaging a player from another city and another union local than the one in its neighborhood if it wants the man and does not consider the local incumbent adequate to its needs. In the past when such changes have been made they have only been accomplished after much manipulation and frequently unalterable opposition to the change on the part of union authorities. This means an eventual development of higher standards of performance within the union and the end of efforts to shield second or third-class players by putting the principle of holding jobs above that of artistic capacity.

Rehearsal Time

The matter of rehearsal time is now also capable of adjustment. The same number of rehearsals—"services"—and the same number of hours of work are retained under the new rulings, but if a conductor prefers to hold four rehearsals, say, of over three hours each, to five rehearsals of the two hours and a half as of previous regulation, he may do so. It is a distinct gain and a necessary preservation of rights on both sides. Let us hope that these and accessory circumstances of the unionization of the Boston Symphony will lead not only to better cooperation between orchestral managements and union heads, but also to a concentration upon artistic ends which will work for more and better orchestras in the years before us.

UNION AGREEMENT WILL HELP SYMPHONY HERE

11 29

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

THERE is no need of anyone pulling a long face over the news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to sign up with the Musicians' Union. It was a matter of pride with many Bostonians that ours was the only major orchestra in the country that was not unionized and there was a general disposition to attribute its pre-eminence to that fact alone. We must remember, however, that they have a pretty good orchestra in Philadelphia, too, and that there was a time when ours was distinctly in second place. Or maybe third. That was after the strike had robbed it of 33 of its members and before Dr. Koussevitzky had come to restore it to its old position of unquestioned superiority, a position considerably easier to maintain after Mr. Stokowski broke with Philadelphia and Mr. Toscanini resigned from the New York Philharmonic!

This non-union business was all to the good so long as we were allowed to do what we wanted to do—broadcast, make records, engage important soloists and guest-conductors, perform in cities and halls of our own chosing. But when Mr. Petrillo began to say "No, no" to all these things it was time something was done about it. We were licked and we had to admit it.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky, with the very valuable assistance of Richard Burgin, was carrying on very well. To date this has been the most interesting Boston Symphony season in several years. We have heard stimulating novelties (the Shostakovitch 7th Symphony, Miaskovsky's 21st, the Sinfonietta of Lopatnikoff and the brand new Symphony of Martinu) and there have been such worthwhile revivals as the instrumental portions of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Debussy's "Iberia" and the First Symphony of Mahler. We have even had notable soloists: Kerstin Thorborg and Jan Smeterlin.

* * * *

This very week there are exceedingly attractive things in store for us. On Friday and Saturday Dr. Koussevitzky is presenting an all-French programme that includes Milhaud's "Le Cortege Funebre"; Debussy's cantata "La Damoiselle Elue" (The Blessed Damozel), with the Radcliffe Choral Society and Marcelle Denya, soprano; Ravel's "Sheherazade," with Mlle. Denya, and the Second Suite from his "Daphnis and Chloe." And tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon Mr. Burgin is repeating the Lopatnikoff and Mahler works mentioned above and adding to them the Bach B minor Suite for Flute and Strings, with Georges Laurent as the soloist.

We could get along without those artists who are tied up with the union. The orchestra might do without making records and broadcasting, though these activities are valuable sources of revenue. It might even forego its trips to New York and other cities, though its prestige would suffer considerably there by. And some would say that having a great conductor in our midst we do not need guest-conductors of eminence. With this attitude, however, there would be those who would sharply disagree. Granted Dr. Koussevitzky's genius and his commendable catholicity, we know him, his interpretations, his prejudices and his predelictions very well by now. An occasional guest-conductor of the first rank, such as Bruno Walter, whom we would have had for two weeks last season but for Mr. Petrillo, is one thing we should have.

* * * *

The final settling of the union dispute was not the only exciting musical intelligence last week. There was also the announcement that we may expect a spring visit from the Metropolitan Opera Company, something that had begun to look very dubious. To be sure it will be only for a week instead of 10 days and 10 days of opera is none too much for a city that once had 18 weeks of it with a fortnight from the Metropolitan on the side. But we must be thankful for small blessings. Repertory and singers and conductors and even the particular week in March when the Metropolitan will come to the Metropolitan Theatre are all to be announced later. One important bit of information that we do possess is that the price range will be from $2 to $5 and that there will more seats than ever before in the lower brackets. Up to date, reduced prices in New York have apparently swelled not decreased the total revenue. There's more than one way of making money.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
NOV 26 1942

BOSTON UNION AND SYMPHONY REACH ACCORD

After obtaining the right to hire musicians anywhere in the country, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to terms with the American Federation of Musicians, it was learned last night.

The orchestra, for years the only non-union group among the major musical ensembles, is expected to return to the air after a two-year ban and was said last evening to be negotiating a $75,000 contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Petrillo Compromises.

During the discussions with the union, Serge Koussevitzky, famed director of the Boston Symphony, insisted on the right to hire players whereever he wanted, although the union bylaws confined him to the local jurisdiction.

James C. Petrillo, president of the union, declared the bylaws could be amended only at the annual convention, but finally obtained approval of the change by polling locals by telegraph.

May Switch Recordings.

If the Boston Symphony signs with CBS, it was believed, it would agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corp., a subsidiary. For many years it had been under contract with the RCA-Victor Co.

The new earning capacity of the orchestra was expected to make a decided change in its financial status. It has been campaigning for $180,000 to meet the deficit for the last two seaosns.

[22]

ORCHESTRA IN UNION

Nov. 29 — 1942

Effects of Agreement Between Boston Symphony and Musicians Federation

By OLIN DOWNES

THE deadlock between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians Union has ended. The Boston orchestra, whose founder, Major Henry L. Higginson, would rather have had the orchestra pass out of existence than see it happen, has joined the union. The union, on its side, has yielded some very important points on procedure to the orchestra. The arrangement is such as to benefit both parties to the agreement, and to raise standards of orchestra personnel and symphonic performance the country over.

It need not be claimed that the considerations which brought the orchestra and the union together were of the purely artistic order, or that the intense and bitter antagonisms of the past were not in the historical background of the picture. Irresistible forces of this period compelled cooperative action on both sides. It was not merely the sentiment that is now nation-wide for collective action and bargaining. It was plain facts.

Weapons of Each Side

The orchestra faced an economic problem which was anything but a simple one. The union faced a situation which made it imperative that the finest existing symphony orchestra, and the one orchestra which had quietly and successfully resisted up to the present time every pressure to force it to do so, should come into the fold. One of the union's cards in the game might be designated as force majeur, in the form of the edict it could issue to the radio and record companies, forbidding them under the letter of contractual agreement to cease broadcasting or record-making of Boston Symphony performances.

It was a powerful weapon in the situation but not one to which the Boston Symphony would necessarily have yielded if it had not been able to secure modifications in union regulations of the past affecting the orchestra's rights in the engagement of players, the adjustment of rehearsal hours and associated matters which could affect standards of personnel and performance, and the complete freedom of the organiantion to pursue its artistic purposes unhindered by union red tape or supervision. It is distinctly to the credit of Mr. Petrillo and his cohorts that they saw the point, realized the temper of the organization with which they were dealing and sufficiently modified their conditions to change the whole orchestral situation in this country.

Old Methods Going

We spoke of the conditions which had acted behind the scenes in this little drama of adjustment. The day when public-spirited patrons of art will pay individually the heavy deficits of a symphony orchestra season, and dictate policy in so doing, are nearing their end. The older principles of orchestra maintenance still operate in this city, where the Philharmonic-Symphony deficits are met by individuals, especially one individual of the orchestra board, who put their hands in their pockets and pay the bills without which the orchestra would pass out of existence.

It is New York's good fortune that this is so, and we have in other places munificent persons whose aid to serious music puts the community and also the professional musicians very much in their debt. But this is not a condition that can be reckoned upon much longer, or one upon which musical unionism can impose. The financial aid upon which orchestras and opera companies which observe union wage scales must in part rely is the income to be derived from radio sponsors and from record sales. In Boston, since the death of the late Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees, there was no person or group of persons willing to meet from their own resources the deficit which accrued, in spite of admirably efficient and economical management, at the end of each season. The Bostonians were faced with a fact. The resumption of radio and record engagements would almost certainly enable the orchestra to wipe out its annual deficits and operate on a balanced budget. This could not be ignored.

In the meantime, and most fortunately, there had come about in the space of a very few years an amazing change in the artistic status of the young American orchestra player. Until the time of the First World War the best players, with some notable exceptions, were those who came from Europe. Those players had a technical and stylistic endowment that few American trained musicians could boast. The Boston orchestra and the other orchestras who sought its level of excellence combed the European field for their personnel.

Problems of Import

Then came labor laws and more latterly quota rulings which made it much harder to get foreign artists into the country and the orchestras than had been the case before. A player from Europe, especially one who intended to enter the Boston Symphony, went through a long legal rigmarole before he could join. He had to enter the country as a visitor, stay here a certain number of months, then be offered a contract by the Boston Symphony and finally be enrolled. Naturally, when a musician from overseas took such an important step he insisted upon a good contract and a fairly long one. This made for rigidity in the arrangements.

Today the best orchestral players are American. It is incontestably the fact, resulting partly from the devastation of the world wars, but also from the sound training young orchestral musicians undergo in our high schools and in some universities and leading American music schools today. Each season a number of remarkably equipped young men, and women too, come from these sources. Even if there were not labor and emigration restrictions, it would still be wasteful for orchestra managements to go elsewhere than to their own country for their membership. The native musician, moreover, is much less a contractual problem than the foreigner used to be. From now on, in the logic of events, we supply our own orchestral players, and their average is the highest in the world.

An Eye for Youth

Dr. Koussevitzky has seen this development take place in the course of his nineteen years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He availed himself of it long before the problem of unionism had become a pressing one. When he came here he found an orchestra principally of elderly men. He put American youth into the organization and gave its personnel the intensive drilling which has made the Boston Symphony the unrivaled symphonic body that it is today.

What the union has conceded in the new agreement has an importance which does not apply only to its arrangements with the Boston Symphony. If correctly reported, it means that henceforth an orchestra management will not be hampered in engaging a player from another city and another union local than the one in its neighborhood if it wants the man and does not consider the local incumbent adequate to its needs. In the past when such changes have been made they have only been accomplished after much manipulation and frequently unalterable opposition to the change on the part of union authorities. This means an eventual development of higher standards of performance within the union and the end of efforts to shield second or third-class players by putting the principle of holding jobs above that of artistic capacity.

Rehearsal Time

The matter of rehearsal time is now also capable of adjustment. The same number of rehearsals—"services"—and the same number of hours of work are retained under the new rulings, but if a conductor prefers to hold four rehearsals, say, of over three hours each, to five rehearsals of the two hours and a half as of previous regulation, he may do so. It is a distinct gain and a necessary preservation of rights on both sides. Let us hope that these and accessory circumstances of the unionization of the Boston Symphony will lead not only to better cooperation between orchestral managements and union heads, but also to a concentration upon artistic ends which will work for more and better orchestras in the years before us.

[22]

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
NOV 20 1942

UNION AGREEMENT WILL HELP SYMPHONY HERE

"29"

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

THERE is no need of anyone pulling a long face over the news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to sign up with the Musicians' Union. It was a matter of pride with many Bostonians that ours was the only major orchestra in the country that was not unionized and there was a general disposition to attribute its pre-eminence to that fact alone. We must remember, however, that they have a pretty good orchestra in Philadelphia, too, and that there was a time when ours was distinctly in second place. Or maybe third. That was after the strike had robbed it of 33 of its members and before Dr. Koussevitzky had come to restore it to its old position of unquestioned superiority, a position considerably easier to maintain after Mr. Stokowski broke with Philadelphia and Mr. Toscanini resigned from the New York Philharmonic!

This non-union business was all to the good so long as we were allowed to do what we wanted to do—broadcast, make records, engage important soloists and guest-conductors, perform in cities and halls of our own chosing. But when Mr. Petrillo began to say "No, no" to all these things it was time something was done about it. We were licked and we had to admit it.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky, with the very valuable assistance of Richard Burgin, was carrying on very well. To date this has been the most interesting Boston Symphony season in several years. We have heard stimulating novelties (the Shostakovitch 7th Symphony, Miaskovsky's 21st, the Sinfonietta of Lopatnikoff and the brand new Symphony of Martinu) and there have been such worthwhile revivals as the instrumental portions of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Debussy's "Iberia" and the First Symphony of Mahler. We have even had notable soloists: Kerstin Thorborg and Jan Smeterlin.

* * * *

This very week there are exceedingly attractive things in store for us. On Friday and Saturday Dr. Koussevitzky is presenting an all-French programme that includes Milhaud's "Le Cortege Funebre"; Debussy's cantata "La Damoiselle Elue" (The Blessed Damozel), with the Radcliffe Choral Society and Marcelle Denya, soprano; Ravel's "Sheherazade," with Mlle. Denya, and the Second Suite from his "Daphnis and Chloe." And tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon Mr. Burgin is repeating the Lopatnikoff and Mahler works mentioned above and adding to them the Bach B minor Suite for Flute and Strings, with Georges Laurent as the soloist.

We could get along without those artists who are tied up with the union. The orchestra might do without making records and broadcasting, though these activities are valuable sources of revenue. It might even forego its trips to New York and other cities, though its prestige would suffer considerably there by. And some would say that having a great conductor in our midst we do not need guest-conductors of eminence. With this attitude, however, there would be those who would sharply disagree. Granted Dr. Koussevitzky's genius and his commendable catholicity, we know him, his interpretations, his prejudices and his predelictions very well by now. An occasional guest-conductor of the first rank, such as Bruno Walter, whom we would have had for two weeks last season but for Mr. Petrillo, is one thing we should have.

* * * *

The final settling of the union dispute was not the only exciting musical intelligence last week. There was also the announcement that we may expect a spring visit from the Metropolitan Opera Company, something that had begun to look very dubious. To be sure it will be only for a week instead of 10 days and 10 days of opera is none too much for a city that once had 18 weeks of it with a fortnight from the Metropolitan on the side. But we must be thankful for small blessings. Repertory and singers and conductors and even the particular week in March when the Metropolitan will come to the Metropolitan Theatre are all to be announced later. One important bit of information that we do possess is that the price range will be from $2 to $5 and that there will more seats than ever before in the lower brackets. Up to date, reduced prices in New York have apparently swelled not decreased the total revenue. There's more than one way of making money.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
NOV 26 1942

BOSTON UNION AND SYMPHONY REACH ACCORD

After obtaining the right to hire musicians anywhere in the country, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has come to terms with the American Federation of Musicians, it was learned last night.

The orchestra, for years the only non-union group among the major musical ensembles, is expected to return to the air after a two-year ban and was said last evening to be negotiating a $75,000 contract with the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Petrillo Compromises.

During the discussions with the union, Serge Koussevitzky, famed director of the Boston Symphony, insisted on the right to hire players whereever he wanted, although the union bylaws confined him to the local jurisdiction.

James C. Petrillo, president of the union, declared the bylaws could be amended only at the annual convention, but finally obtained approval of the change by polling locals by telegraph.

May Switch Recordings.

If the Boston Symphony signs with CBS, it was believed, it would agree to make recordings for the Columbia Recording Corp., a subsidiary. For many years it had been under contract with the RCA-Victor Co.

The new earning capacity of the orchestra was expected to make a decided change in its financial status. It has been campaigning for $180,000 to meet the deficit for the last two seaosns.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

ORCHESTRA IN UNION

Nov. 29 1942

Effects of Agreement Between Boston Symphony and Musicians Federation

By OLIN DOWNES

THE deadlock between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Musicians Union has ended. The Boston orchestra, whose founder, Major Henry L. Higginson, would rather have had the orchestra pass out of existence than see it happen, has joined the union. The union, on its side, has yielded some very important points on procedure to the orchestra. The arrangement is such as to benefit both parties to the agreement, and to raise standards of orchestra personnel and symphonic performance the country over.

It need not be claimed that the considerations which brought the orchestra and the union together were of the purely artistic order, or that the intense and bitter antagonisms of the past were not in the historical background of the picture. Irresistible forces of this period compelled cooperative action on both sides. It was not merely the sentiment that is now nation-wide for collective action and bargaining. It was plain facts.

Weapons of Each Side

The orchestra faced an economic problem which was anything but a simple one. The union faced a situation which made it imperative that the finest existing symphony orchestra, and the one orchestra which had quietly and successfully resisted up to the present time every pressure to force it to do so, should come into the fold. One of the union's cards in the game might be designated as force majeur, in the form of the edict it could issue to the radio and record companies, forbidding them under the letter of contractual agreement to cease broadcasting or record-making of Boston Symphony performances.

It was a powerful weapon in the situation but not one to which the Boston Symphony would necessarily have yielded if it had not been able to secure modifications in union regulations of the past affecting the orchestra's rights in the engagement of players, the adjustment of rehearsal hours and associated matters which could affect standards of personnel and performance, and the complete freedom of the organiaztion to pursue its artistic purposes unhindered by union red tape or supervision. It is distinctly to the credit of Mr. Petrillo and his cohorts that they saw the point, realized the temper of the organization with which they were dealing and sufficiently modified their conditions to change the whole orchestral situation in this country.

Old Methods Going

We spoke of the conditions which had acted behind the scenes in this little drama of adjustment. The day when public-spirited patrons of art will pay individually the heavy deficits of a symphony orchestra season, and dictate policy in so doing, are nearing their end. The older principles of orchestra maintenance still operate in this city, where the Philharmonic-Symphony deficits are met by individuals, especially one individual of the orchestra board, who put their hands in their pockets and pay the bills without which the orchestra would pass out of existence.

It is New York's good fortune that this is so, and we have in other places munificent persons whose aid to serious music puts the community and also the professional musicians very much in their debt. But this is not a condition that can be reckoned upon much longer, or one upon which musical unionism can impose. The financial aid upon which orchestras and opera companies which observe union wage scales must in part rely is the income to be derived from radio sponsors and from record sales. In Boston, since the death of the late Ernest B. Dane, president of the board of trustees, there was no person or group of persons willing to meet from their own resources the deficit which accrued, in spite of admirably efficient and economical management, at the end of each season. The Bostonians were faced with a fact. The resumption of radio and record engagements would almost certainly enable the orchestra to wipe out its annual deficits and operate on a balanced budget. This could not be ignored.

In the meantime, and most fortunately, there had come about in the space of a very few years an amazing change in the artistic status of the young American orchestra player. Until the time of the First World War the best players, with some notable exceptions, were those who came from Europe. Those players had a technical and stylistic endowment that few American trained musicians could boast. The Boston orchestra and the other orchestras who sought its level of excellence combed the European field for their personnel.

Problems of Import

Then came labor laws and more latterly quota rulings which made it much harder to get foreign artists into the country and the orchestras than had been the case before. A player from Europe, especially one who intended to enter the Boston Symphony, went through a long legal rigmarole before he could join. He had to enter the country as a visitor, stay here a certain number of months, then be offered a contract by the Boston Symphony and finally be enrolled. Naturally, when a musician from overseas took such an important step he insisted upon a good contract and a fairly long one. This made for rigidity in the arrangements.

Today the best orchestral players are American. It is incontestably the fact, resulting partly from the devastation of the world wars, but also from the sound training young orchestral musicians undergo in our high schools and in some universities and leading American music schools today. Each season a number of remarkably equipped young men, and women too, come from these sources. Even if there were not labor and emigration restrictions, it would still be wasteful for orchestra managements to go elsewhere than to their own country for their membership. The native musician, moreover, is much less a contractual problem than the foreigner used to be. From now on, in the logic of events, we supply our own orchestral players, and their average is the highest in the world.

An Eye for Youth

Dr. Koussevitzky has seen this development take place in the course of his nineteen years as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He availed himself of it long before the problem of unionism had become a pressing one. When he came here he found an orchestra principally of elderly men. He put American youth into the organization and gave its personnel the intensive drilling which has made the Boston Symphony the unrivaled symphonic body that it is today.

What the union has conceded in the new agreement has an importance which does not apply only to its arrangements with the Boston Symphony. If correctly reported, it means that henceforth an orchestra management will not be hampered in engaging a player from another city and another union local than the one in its neighborhood if it wants the man and does not consider the local incumbent adequate to its needs. In the past when such changes have been made they have only been accomplished after much manipulation and frequently unalterable opposition to the change on the part of union authorities. This means an eventual development of higher standards of performance within the union and the end of efforts to shield second or third-class players by putting the principle of holding jobs above that of artistic capacity.

Rehearsal Time

The matter of rehearsal time is now also capable of adjustment. The same number of rehearsals—"services"—and the same number of hours of work are retained under the new rulings, but if a conductor prefers to hold four rehearsals, say, of over three hours each, to five rehearsals of the two hours and a half as of previous regulation, he may do so. It is a distinct gain and a necessary preservation of rights on both sides. Let us hope that these and accessory circumstances of the unionization of the Boston Symphony will lead not only to better cooperation between orchestral managements and union heads, but also to a concentration upon artistic ends which will work for more and better orchestras in the years before us.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
JOURNAL EVERY EVENING
NOV 20 1942

UNION AGREEMENT WILL HELP SYMPHONY HERE

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

THERE is no need of anyone pulling a long face over the news that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has agreed to sign up with the Musicians' Union. It was a matter of pride with many Bostonians that ours was the only major orchestra in the country that was not unionized and there was a general disposition to attribute its pre-eminence to that fact alone. We must remember, however, that they have a pretty good orchestra in Philadelphia, too, and that there was a time when ours was distinctly in second place. Or maybe third. That was after the strike had robbed it of 33 of its members and before Dr. Koussevitzky had come to restore it to its old position of unquestioned superiority, a position considerably easier to maintain after Mr. Stokowski broke with Philadelphia and Mr. Toscanini resigned from the New York Philharmonic!

This non-union business was all to the good so long as we were allowed to do what we wanted to do—broadcast, make records, engage important soloists and guest-conductors, perform in cities and halls of our own chosing. But when Mr. Petrillo began to say "No, no" to all these things it was time something was done about it. We were licked and we had to admit it.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky, with the very valuable assistance of Richard Burgin, was carrying on very well. To date this has been the most interesting Boston Symphony season in several years. We have heard stimulating novelties (the Shostakovitch 7th Symphony, Miaskovsky's 21st, the Sinfonietta of Lopatnikoff and the brand new Symphony of Martinu) and there have been such worthwhile revivals as the instrumental portions of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Debussy's "Iberia" and the First Symphony of Mahler. We have ever had notable soloists: Kerstin Thorgly attractive things in store for us. tky is presenting an all-French pro- ortege Funebre"; Debussy's cantata amozel), with the Radcliffe Choral Ravel's "Sheherazade," with Mlle. Daphnis and Chloe." And tomorrow urgin is repeating the Lopatnikoff adding to them the Bach B minor s Laurent as the soloist.

* *

artists who are tied up with the making records and broadcasting, rces of revenue. It might even r cities, though its prestige would would say that having a great con- st-conductors of eminence. With hose who would sharply disagree. his commendable catholicity, we ices and his predelictions very well of the first rank, such as Bruno wo weeks last season but for Mr.

* *

e was not the only exciting musi- o the announcement that we may n Opera Company, something that ure it will be only for a week in- one too much for a city that once the Metropolitan on the side. But Repertory and singers and con- March when the Metropolitan will to be announced later. One im- ssess is that the price range will re seats than ever before in the es in New York have apparently There's more than one way of Orchestra today ... to confirm or deny ... report that they ... to an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians and its president, James C. Petrillo.

The report said the orchestra has accepted terms of the negotiations which call for numerous concessions on its part.

The Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the U. S. that has been non-union in recent years.

[22]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD
DEC

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN
Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE
DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER
DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES
DEC 3 - 1942

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN PEDRO, CALIF.
NEWS-PILOT
DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs AFL Pact

NEW YORK. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

HERKIMER, N. Y.
TELEGRAM
DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE — THE ORIGINAL — PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES
4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4 - 194.
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE
DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
4 - 1942

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

JOINS UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement yesterday with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
- 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

...chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony ...a, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.
NEWS & SENTINEL

DEC 3 - 1942

SIGNS WITH ORCHESTRA

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP) — James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE — THE ORIGINAL — PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 194.

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

last night.

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

Bos
rem

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to per-

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement to-day with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

United States and Canada.

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — THE ORIGINAL — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

[23]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

DEC 3 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agerement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE — THE ORIGINAL — PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER

DEC 3 - 1942

Symphony Goes Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2436
Cne Minute's Walk From Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE — THE ORIGINAL — PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 194

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

last night.

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

[23]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM

At Last Unionized

New York —(UP)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the AFM, who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitszky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

"The big item that the AFM had to give way on," Petrillo said, "was the question of importing symphony players. For instance a man playing in New York who wanted employment in Chicago couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2436
One Minute's Walk from Here

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

[23]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From POMONA, CALIF.
PROGRESS-BULLETIN

Tel. Chelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEYMOUR, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 3 - 1942

three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel 2436
One Minute's Walk from Here

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 194.

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE

DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

[23]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] chestra Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2485
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES
4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From TIPTON, IND.
DAILY TRIBUNE
DEC 4 - 1942

IN THE UNION.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Signed Up With Petrillo.

New York, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
- 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] of Israel, Jewish Cemetery Association, gathered in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse [illegible] Hitler, Goering, Himmler and three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2436
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PORT HURON, MICH.
TIMES-HERALD

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Takes In Boston Symphony

New York, Dec. [illegible] INS—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made today by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

[illegible] (INS)—A meat shortage that has [illegible] the Los Angeles area was threat-

[illegible] FLASHES

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 6,732)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 4,124) (S 21,777)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

[illegible] Bost[illegible] rem[illegible]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit [illegible]

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

[illegible]

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

[illegible]

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D 57,570) (S 56,181)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

...ived.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

W YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...of Israel, Jewish ceremonies ...
...gathered in the old city last night ...
...and solemnly pronounced a curse ...
..., Hitler, Goering, Himmler and ...

...three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

...wanted ... couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY
FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2426
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs with Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 4, (INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well known orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

...IN BRIEF—

New Orleans — Football scouts from Tennessee and Tulsa would ...
...Schmalz and Patrick were dreaming even, 15-10 and 14-15.
...Standings follow: Wills, 150; Schmalz, 127; Thom, 127; Meyer, 111; Schubring, 110, and Patrick, ...

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D ...)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

N...
Bost...
rem...

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit ...

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 1 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,214)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC [illegible] 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON
NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] of Israel, Jewish cabalist [illegible]
[illegible] gathered in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse [illegible] Hitler, Goering, Himmler and three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2498
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE — THE ORIGINAL — PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES
[illegible] 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4 - 194[illegible]

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Union Joined by Symphony

Organization Last of Kind to Affiliate.

New York, Dec. 4 (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, has signed an agreement with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the A.F.M., who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC [illegible] 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
[illegible] 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D [illegible])

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D [illegible]) (S [illegible])

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

N[illegible]
Bos[illegible]
rem[illegible]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit [illegible]

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC [illegible] - 1942

[illegible]

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible]chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
[illegible] 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC [illegible] - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

...ved.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

...W YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James ... Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...of Israel, Jewish ... in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse ... Hitler, Goering, Himmler and

...three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

...wanted ... couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2426
One Minute's Walk From Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT

DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

as an ... Boston Symphony ... union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D ...)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

N...
Bost...
rem...

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit...

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

... - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the or... chestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by... laws to permit symphony musi... cians to move from one sympho... ny jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
~~TELEGRAM~~ POST

... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC [illegible]

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 -(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2490
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4-1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES
4 - 1942

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

sible for the shortage.

[illegible] education of musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony ochestra in the United States.

as an [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 6,732)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 4,721) (S 21,777)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

N
Bost
rem

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit [illegible]

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
[illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible]chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by[illegible] laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D 37,370) (S 58,181)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

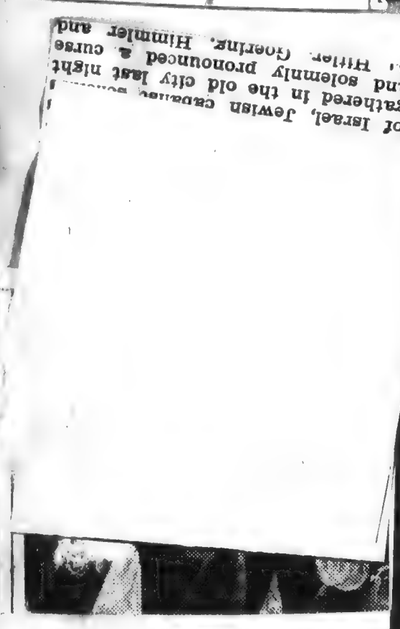
Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 4 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.



three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY
FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2486
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4-1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES

4 - 1942

sible for the shortage.

business arbitrarily proposing

...ign Up With the AFL

NEW YORK—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

as an ini... Boston Symphony for ... union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the agreement.

[23]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D ...)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

N...
Bos...
rem...

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to per-

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

...- 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,214)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... ...chestra Signs Petrillo U...on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D 37,370) (S 56,181)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

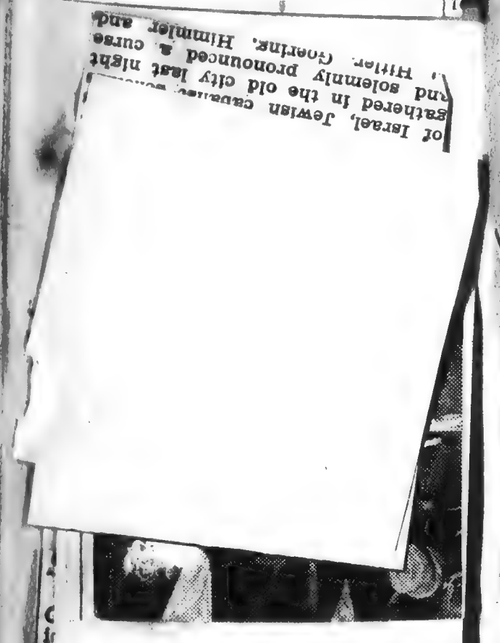
Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 4 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.



three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2486
One Minute's Walk From Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942

sumption were said to be ready
sible for the shortage.

t dinner. And just think—you eed only one pound of fresh cranberries and two-thirds cup of sugar o make one whole quart of this ll-purpose health juice. Better heck this large quantity canning ecipe, too, you'll want to put up everal quarts while fresh cranberries are at r best.

Now Is Unionized

NEW YORK. — (INS) — The last of the principal musical organizations in the country, the Boston Symphony orchestra, to become unionized, Friday was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

tion of Musicians of negotiations.

The agreement was announced by James C. Petrillo, president of the A.F.M., who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members of the union through the [23]

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

...chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] Hitler Goering, Himmler and [illegible] solemnly pronounced a curse [illegible] of Israel, Jewish [illegible] gathered in the old city last night

three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2496
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU — THE ORIGINAL — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW

DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians (A. F. L.). Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor.

[illegible] PRODUCE — Fresh Butter
[illegible] TIMES . . . BY ORDER hese Cold Days!
POULTRY

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN

DEC 4 - 1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its world-famous conductor, become members through the agr[illegible]

This Clipping From LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 6,732)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 4,721) (S 21,777)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

N[illegible]
Bos[illegible]
rem[illegible]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit [illegible]

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT

DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,214)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D 37,370) (S 58,781)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL

DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES

DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] Hitler, Goering, Himmler and [illegible] of Israel, Jewish [illegible] gathered in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse

three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

wanted [illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2498
One Minute's Walk from Erie

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
TIMES
4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY JOINS AFM UNION

New York, Dec. 4. — (U.P.) — The 105 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, its famous maestro, became members of the American Federation of Musicians with the signing of a contrace between the orchestra management and the AFM.

James C. etrillo, president of AFM, announced that the contract was signed after his organization had amended its by-laws on a point demanded by the Bost[illegible]ny regarding importation of talent.

Petrillo said that every one of the 60 symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada is now a member of his organization.

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the Symphony, including Dr. Serge[illegible]witzky, its world-famo[illegible] become members [illegible]rough the agr[illegible] pl[illegible]

s[illegible]

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

N[illegible]
Bos[illegible]
rem[illegible]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
[illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

Circ. (D 2,214)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

[illegible]

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible]chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
~~TELEGRAM~~ POST
4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
[illegible] - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 194

...ved.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

...W YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James ...Petrillo, president of the Amer...can federation of musicians, AFL, ...oday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...of Israel, Jewish ceremony ...
...Hitler (Goering, Himmler and ...
...nd solemnly pronounced a curse ...
...athered in the old city last night ...

...three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

...wanted ... couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2426
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
THE ORIGINAL — NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

CLEVELAND CITIZEN
CLEVELAND, OHIO
12/4/42

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

Boston, Mass.—The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L.

...Bos... ...Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS
TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Boston Symphony for joining the union. All of the 105 members of the ...phony, including Dr. Serge ...itzky, its world-famou... ...become members ... agre... ...ugh the

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D ...)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC [illegible] 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

W YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible] wanted [illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2456
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

LABOR HERALD
BALTIMORE, MD.
12/4/42

This Clipping From SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN REVIEW
DEC 4 - 1942

SYMPHONY GOES UNION.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

Boston [illegible]hony for joining the union [illegible]e 105 members of th[illegible]cluding Dr. Ser[illegible] world-fam[illegible]em-be[illegible]

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC [illegible] 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 11,890)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

N[illegible]
Bos[illegible]
rem[illegible]

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Signs Boston Symphony To Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L., announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony [illegible]

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp[illegible] Signs Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible]chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. [illegible]

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 194

...ved.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON
NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.
...wanted ... couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY
FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2486
Use Hibbert's Walk From Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized
New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

THE ORIGINAL HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

Boston" Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

HANNIBAL,
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS
TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

...the A.F.M., who said his organization had amended its by-laws as an inflexible condition by the Bos...phony for joining the un... the 105 members o... including Dr. ... its world-... mem... the

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC ... 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D ...)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D ...) (S ...)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 3,504) (S 15,283)

This Clipping From
JOHNSON CITY, TENN.
CHRONICLE
DEC 4 - 1942

SYMPHONY UNIONIZED
NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP) —James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
...d 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

...chestra

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

...Jack H. Thompson
Named City Attorney

CORSICANA, Texas, Dec. 3.—Jack H. Thompson, former city attorney, was elected city attorney to fill an unexpired term ending in April, 1943. Thompson received the seventy-three votes cast in the municipal election. He was unopposed.

The election was necessitated when D. W. Ralston resigned Nov. 9 to become assistant Navarro County criminal district attorney.

...Forces, Lieutenant Peters, a graduate of the Taylor High School and the University of Texas, received his commission in late November at Fort Scott, Ill.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

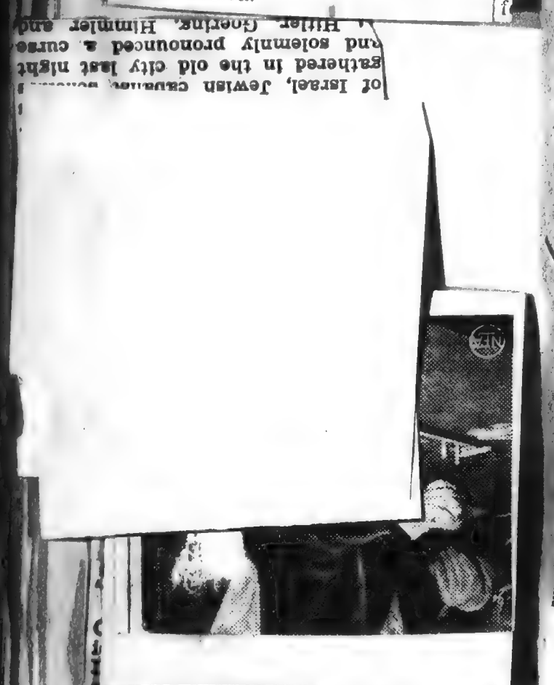
Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.



three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2496
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiation

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

HARTFORD, CONN.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

registrations revoked.

SYMPHONY JOINS UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (A.F.L.) yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 1942

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] Israel, Jewish [illegible] gathered in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse [illegible] Hitler, Goering, Himmler and three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

wanted [illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2490
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with American Federation of Musi after six months of negotiation

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE INC. THE ORIGINAL PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

HANNIBAL
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS
TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

by [illegible] the A.F[illegible] zation as af[illegible] Bos[illegible] u[illegible]

PARKER PEN & PENCIL ACE

[illegible] the 11; g [illegible] INS Schmal[illegible] Stanli[illegible] ng even[illegible] and the University of Texas, received his commission in late No[illegible]

[illegible] date of the Taylor High School

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 6,732)

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

Petrillo Welcomes Boston Symphony

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—(INS)—The last of the principal musical organizations in the country—the Boston Symphony Orchestra—to become unionized, today was signed up with the American Federation of Musicians.

Announcement of the agreement, which affects 105 members of the orchestra, was made by James C. Petrillo, president of the union.

Also covered by the contract, although he did not enter into negotiations, was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the well-known orchestra.

This Clipping From
EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs Petrillo Union Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3-194

...ived.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

W YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James ...Petrillo, president of the Amer...can federation of musicians, AFL, ...oday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...Hitler Goering, Himmler and ...
...of Israel, Jewish ... last night ...
...gathered in the old city ... solemnly pronounced a curse ...

...three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.
...wanted ... couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY
FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2426
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3- 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization its kind in the United States, ... ed an agreement today with American Federation of Musicia... after six months of negotiations.

HENRY ROMEIKE INC. THE ORIGINAL NEWS PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

This Clipping
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4-1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4- 1942

POULTRY

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4-1942

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS
TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

...zation
as a...
Bo...

[23]

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC ... 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 221,555) (S 594,890)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
EXAMINER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY BECOMES UNIONIZED

NEW YORK, Dec. 3 (U.P.)—The Bosto... Symphony has become unionized—th... last organization of its kind to do so.
James C. Petrillo, President of th... American Federation of Musicians, an... nounces that the orchestra signed a... agreement after six months of negotia... tions. All of the 105 members and th... conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky, no... hold union cards.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symp... Signs Petrillo U...on Pact ...chestra

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A.F.L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

Circ. (D 57,570) (S 56,161)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
... 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
... 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 194[illegible]

[illegible]ved.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

W YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James [illegible] Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

[illegible] of Israel, Jewish [illegible]
[illegible] gathered in the old city last night and solemnly pronounced a curse [illegible] Hitler, Goering, Himmler and [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

[illegible] wanted [illegible] couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.

MURPHY
FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2495
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization its kind in the United States, ed an agreement today with American Federation of Musicia after six months of negotiations.

[23]

HENRY ROMEIKE INC. THE ORIGINAL NEWS PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4 - 1942
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

the A.F
zatior as B

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC [illegible] 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
[illegible] JOURNAL

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, A. F. L., today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
DEC [illegible] - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 29,517) (S 29,654)

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN-PATRIOT
DEC 4 - 1942
Circ. (D 2,217)

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From [illegible]S ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

[illegible]ston Symp[illegible] [illegible]gns Petrillo U[illegible]on Pact [illegible]chestra

[illegible]EW YORK, Dec. 3. (AP)—[illegible]nes C. Petrillo, president of [illegible] American Federation of Mu[illegible]ians, A.F.L., today announced [illegible]e signing of a three-year agree[illegible]ent with the Boston Symphony [illegible]rchestra, bringing into the fed[illegible]ration the only major nonunion [illegible]ymphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its by-laws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

[illegible] Circ. (D 57,570) (S 58,161)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
POST
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS-SENTINEL
DEC 4 - 1942
[illegible] Circ. (D [illegible])

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
TIMES
DEC 4 - 1942

BOSTON SYMPHONY MAKES ITS PEACE WITH MUSICIANS' UNION

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL, yesterday announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major nonunion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

A.F.OF L. WKLY
NEWS SERVICE
WASHINGTON, D.C.
12/1/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMEN

Boston, Mass. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLISTON, N. D.
HERALD

DEC 3 - 194

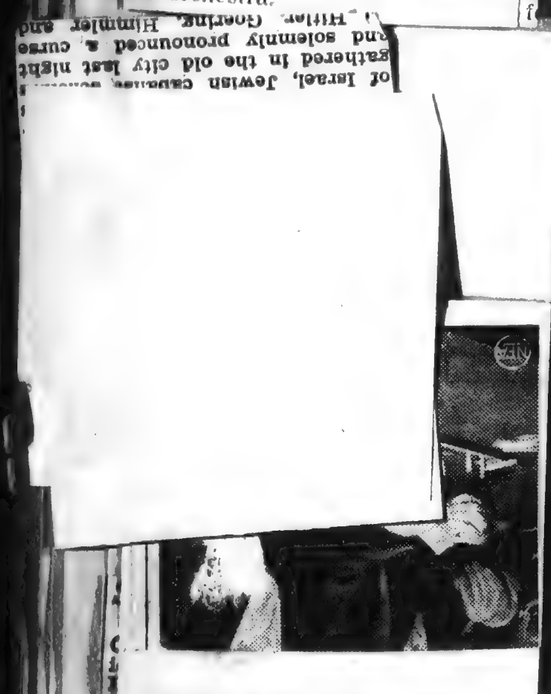
...ived.

PETRILLO GETS BOSTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 3—(AP)—James C. Petrillo, president of the American federation of musicians, AFL, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States. The agreement covers 105 members of the orchestra.

...ree-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-union symphony orchestra in the United States.

...couldn't go there unless he had the OK of that local board.



MURPHY FUNERAL HOME
20 Annandale Road Tel. 2486
One Minute's Walk from Bus

DEC 3 - 1942

Boston Symphony Unionized

New York (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the last remaining non-union organization of its kind in the United States, signed an agreement today with the American Federation of Musicians after six months of negotiations.

THE ORIGINAL HENRY ROMEIKE NEW YORK PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

Boston Symphony Signs Trade Union Agreement

BOSTON, MASS. — The Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
LIGHT
DEC 4 - 1942

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, IND.
ITEM
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.
SUN
DEC 4 - 1942
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HANNIBAL, MO.
LABOR PRESS
12/4/42

BOSTON SYMPHONY SIGNS TRADE UNION AGREEMENT

Boston, Mass. — Ahe Boston Symphony, which for several years has been the only non-union orchestra of national prominence in the United States, has finally signed a contract with the American Federation of Musicians (AFL).

the A...
zati...
a...

[23]

This Clipping From
LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL COURIER
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
DEC ... 1942

This Clipping From
PIERRE, S. D.
CAPITAL JOURNAL
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
DEC 4-1942

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
DEC 4 - 1942

This Clipping From
SEATTLE, WASH.
POST INTELLIGENCER
DEC 4 - 1942

Boston Symphony Signs With Union

NEW YORK, Dec. 3. — (AP)— James C. Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Labor, today announced the signing of a three-year agreement with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bringing into the federation the only major non-uniion symphony orchestra in the United States.

Petrillo said the agreement, covering 105 members of the orchestra, represented a concession on the part of the federation, in that the union amended its bylaws to permit symphony musicians to move from one symphony jurisdiction to another within the United States and Canada.

This Clipping From EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS
... - 1942

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
